"ALOFT AND ALOW."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY EDWARD E. KIDDER.

She shone like a lily-bud then
  In that singular feminine mob,
And nightly she dazzled the men
  As she dipped in "The Charity Bob."
She was modest and pretty and young,
  Of lovers she hadn't a trace—
In all "Billee Taylor" there wasn't a sailor
  Possessed of her figure or face.

The poorest and humblest can plan
  There's no one it pays to despise—
I'm only a calcium man,
  And my station is up in the "flies:'
But I loved little Maud from the first,
  So gentle and dainty and good,
And my calcium's mellow, green, crimson nd yellow
  I'd throw upon her when I could.

She seemed like a goddess to me
  As I looked from my station above—
They say that a woman can see
  Whenever a fellow's in love.
I think that she knew all along,
  And it caused her a deal of surprise
When, fair and entrancing, she'd pause in her dancing,
  And watch me with wondering eyes.

One night in the chorus of "Love"
  Her voice sounded tender and sweet;
She threw me a glance up above
  That sent me clean off of my feet.
I mixed up my calciums so—
  I never had done it before—
That I gave them a pink for a purple, I think—
  Lord, how the stage-manager swore!

We came to be friends from that night,
  And talked of each other's affairs;
I'd meet her—by accident, quite—
  As she tripped down the dressing-room stairs.
The boys were all jealous, of course—
  The "stage hands" and actors and all—
When they were rejected and I was selected
  To carry her satchel and shawl.

She isn't a chorister now—
  We went and got married, you see;
And I can afford, I'll allow,
  To keep all her music for me—
For me and for somebody else!
  I'd forgotten to mention, you see,
That there's a small sailor we've called "Billee Taylor,"
  Who looks like his mother and me.

THE BEAUTIFUL GIAOUR:

AN INCIDENT IN THE CAREER OF ARABI PASHA.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY JAMES WIGHT.

The presence of half a dozen Parisian ladies and gentlemen, on a holiday tour, in Alexandria, during the Summer of 1879, was made the occasion, by the French Consul, of issuing cards of invitation for a private theatrical performance. The spacious salons of the official residence were transformed into an elegant bijou theatre, with all the essential appurtenances. The invitations were as characteristically cosmopolitan as the city itself. Native Egyptians, Turks, Italians, Greeks, Germans, Austrians, Danes, Russians, Spaniards and Britons were included, although the French element preponderated. A competent orchestra was engaged, and refreshments were served on a bounteous scale.

When the curtain rose the auditorium was comfortably packed. The variety of features and costume was an interesting study; but, perhaps, four Pashas, who occupied seats in the front row, came in for the lion's share of curious attention, and, among the ladies, of admiration.

"That is the Pasha Damar. What a beautiful black beard he has!"

"What a splendid fellow the Pasha Arabi is, with his big black eyes and leonine head!"

And so on till the band struck up, and the performance began.

For the delectation of his guests the Consul had engaged the services of a native magician, who might be considered, as it were, a descendant of those necromancers who tried in the olden time to rival the superior performances of Aaron. The sorcerer was an aged man, and looked and dressed his role with decided success. The vast turban, the flowing beard and the ample robes were in every respect satisfactory. A boy selected at random from the donkey-drivers on the street was brought in, washed and purified, to act as his assistant. A pan of burning charcoal, termed a mangale, was placed on the stage, and the magician, bending over it, sprinkled upon the fire some spices, the fragrant smoke from which curled round the bending form of the wizard while he pronounced some weird incantations. This ceremony over, the boy was made to sit down, and a large cloth was bound securely round his head over his eyes. Then the magician took ink and poured a half-teaspoonful into the boy's palm, continuing another form of incantation. Finally he stopped, and, addressing the boy, now visibly agitated, said:

"My son, what do you behold?"

"Allah be praised! I see an infidel lovelier than the houris of Paradise, and she dances."

"Describe her, my son."

"Her hair is like woven sunbeams and her eyes are blacker than a gazelle's."

"Well, what else do you see?"

"I see the lovely infidel on the saddle of a donkey——"

Here an explosion of laughter from the French clique disturbed the revelation and caused the wizard to look black with horror. Quiet being restored, the mummery was continued. It was apparently a lamentable farce throughout.

"The little rascal donkey-driver has evidently seen our Genieve," said the Consul's lady to her companion, who replied:

"Evidently so; but wasn't that a shrewd bid for business when he mounted her on a donkey!"

While this pretended necromancy had been going on, the French artists were engaged in a lively dispute in the adjoining room. They had arranged to give some scenes from "La Belle Helene," and now, at the last minute, through pique, caprice, or Heaven only knows what, Mlle. Genieve Follett, the prima-donna, couldn't sing the leading role that evening. No, she couldn't sing it, and it was no use insisting.

"What was the matter with mademoiselle? Had she a cold? Was she indisposed? Or was ——"

"No, no, NO, NO! She had no cold; but she wouldn't sing 'La Belle Helene,' that was all."

"Would she sing 'La Grande Duchesse de Gerolstein?' "

"Yes; that will be better; and—and, I'll dance, as usual, of course."

The hitch caused some delay in the dressing, but the announcement by the stage-manager of the change in the programme gave general satisfaction.

"Gad, if the Follett dances the cancan, that donkey-driver's vision will have claims to be considered supernatural," said an Englishman to an American.

"That's so."

Genieve Follett is as difficult to describe as Aphrodite herself. Her father was French, her mother a Greek. She was twenty, with a mouth like a cherry, a neck like a swan, the limbs of a Greek statue, and the figure of Diana, the mythologic huntress. Her hair was pale gold, her eyes dark, deeply, unfathomably violet. In a word, she was ravishing, and during the previous season Paris had been figuratively at her feet. Her picture greeted the wayfarer with smiling eyes from every bookseller's shop. Paris fairly blossomed with Genieve. You could buy her photograph full-face, three-quarter-face, and side-face. You could have her standing, sitting or reclining.

Genieve had come out to Egypt on a frolic, mingled with a little serious business. When twelve years old she had been affianced by her parents to her cousin, Demetrius Follett, now a wealthy merchant of Cairo, whither she was bound, after having "done" Alexandria.

"If Demetrius possessed as much wealth as rumor reported, and if she liked him personally into the bargain, she might condescend to marry him. If not, then of course she would return his betrothal-ring, and there would be an end of it."

The foregoing extract from an overheard conversation will show the reader that Genieve was a thorough woman of the world—selfish, vain and inconsiderate. But of course she had been very much petted, and her boast that "I can marry a prince any day!" was not without some foundation.

While we have been diverging in a biographical direction, Genieve Follette has been assuming the role of the Grand Duchess, General Boum has assumed the appearance of an Egyptian officer of high rank, and the audience had yawned and drunk sherbets. Suddenly the enchantress appears on the stage. The rustling of garments and the hum of subdued conversation ceases. For the space of a full minute there is a sort of amazed silence, during which the four Pashas gaze upon Follett with a kind of amazed zoological expression of countenance, as if some monster, half houri, half angelic, had suddenly appeared before them. But the amazement soon takes utterance, and plaudits of the most cosmopolitan kind soon greet the smiling divinity.

Whatever gravity remained on the grim faces of the Pashas during the diva's singing disappeared after her mad, kicking cancan with General Boum. Their eyes seemed to flash fire, and the large black orbs of Araba Pasha particularly were redder than the eyes of an infuriated tiger.

"Look at that Turk's terrible eyes!" said a New York lady in a whisper to her escort, as she contemplated the Pasha's fierce, fixed gaze.

"Yes, indeed! Scratch a Russian, they say, and you will find a Tartar. Scratch Arabi Pasha, and you disclose a Nubian lion."

"I suppose he's more or less married?"

"I believe so; why?"

"Because, if ever a man was in love, he is madly enamored of Mlle. Follett."

"The diva! Impossible; she is an infidel!"

When the performance was over, the tall, square-shouldered, imposing form of Arabi Pasha was seen lingering behind his three companions. He sought audience of the French Consul, his host, and at his desire was introduced to Mlle. Follett. She was evidently very much flattered, and she assumed her most winning air of sedateness. As they walked a little apart, Arabi Pasha asked concerning her previous life. She answered evasively, covering him with her serene, fathomless gaze.

"Give me your confidence—answer me truly, for the love of the Prophet!" he earnestly said.

"I cannot answer you fully; it is enough that my life has not been such as you would approve."

He took his leave of her with grave kindness.

"By Jove, Mlle. Follett!" cried the Consul, "Arabi Pasha's overhead in ears in love with you."

"Why didn't he tell me so, then?" queried the enchantress.

Next morning an old woman with a basket asked for Mlle. Follett. Being introduced to her, the old lady produced jewels, shawls, and scarfs in galore, salaamed and departed. The diva gazed at the treasures in speechless astonishment. They were worth at least a hundred thousand francs. Then she arose, put on the jewels, coquettishly adjusted the scarfs, and looked at herself in the mirror.

"Ah, ha! Mademoiselle Follett," cried the Consul's lady, entering, "do I find you contemplating the Mohammedan religion!"

They both burst out laughing.

"Well, I must confess I am not deaf to the pleadings of such eloquent ear-rings, and perhaps the great truths of Islam do find their way to my very, very susceptible heart through the delicate folds of this wonderful Persian silk!"

Arabi Pasha was really in love with the brilliant primadonna. If he could induce her to embrace his own creed he might add her to his harem as the last and highest of his wives. He was and is a practical man. He did not assail the theological opinions of Genieve, which really amounted to little, with the Imaums or Mussulman saints. He did not press upon her the eternal truths of that important chapter of the Koran termed the "Cow," or invite her attention to the beautiful system of morality set forth in the "Table." As we have seen, he sent her costly presents instead of tracts, and he artfully appealed to her professional sympathies by inviting her to attend the performances of the gahwazee, or dancing-girls of Upper Egypt; and moreover, having learned that the true vision of the donkey-driver had discovered Mlle. Follett's innate superstition, Arabi Pasha invited her to see the performances of a troupe of Bagdad jugglers and serpent-charmers. To crown all, he brought to her a howling dervish who prophesied that she would ride on a donkey out of Alexandria to a palace of ivory, where she would be esteemed "the pride and ornament of her sex and the glory of womankind."

Genieve was only a woman, and she was flattered. Above all, she was curious and avaricious. The donkey-ride to the ivory place haunted her. She intimated that she would like to visit the palace. He informed her that before she could enter its sacred portals it would be necessary for her to make a confession of the Mohammedan faith. As she was devoid of religious convictions, she had no religious scruples. The profession of faith she wrote at Arabi Pasha's dictation was as follows:

"God is God, and Mohammed is the Prophet of God, and you, my friends, and thou, Demetrius, my betrothed, are all infidel dogs."

Next day she took her donkey-ride, and was seized by a party of Egyptians dressed as Hedjaz pilgrims, and carried captive to a palace of Arabi Pasha in the suburbs of Tantah. On the day of her abduction, Demetrius Follett arrived in Alexandria from Cairo, with many gifts for his betrothed wife, of whose presence in the former city he had been notified by the French Consul. An active but fruitless search was instituted in Alexandria for the missing actress. Arabi Pasha was questioned, but professed to be quite ignorant of her absence and her fate. Finally, the donkey-boy, who had been instructed in his role, said she had been carried off into the Desert by a company of Bedouin Arabs.

Guarded and watched by eunuchs, "the beautiful giaour," as her attendants termed her, paced to and fro in her elegantly appointed boudoir, fuming and fretting. She had been the victim of the blackest treachery, and the thought of it made her hands clinch, her eyes flash, her frame quiver. She had been a prisoner a whole week—a week that seemed a century of years, and yet she had not been able to exchange a syllable with anyone around her.

On the evening of the seventh day of her captivity, Arabi Pasha entered her apartment with the soft, stealthy step of a feline creature. Beholding her, he stopped, started and murmured an involuntary expression of his surprise and admiration.

There are women, as somebody has remarked, who can rouse a passion far more intense than can be expressed in the word love—a something irresistible, which sweeps away, as with a tornado, memory, honor, reason, ambition. This was the sovereign passion that inspired this bland miscreant now. He began to woe her with dulcet courtliness and honeyed sweetness, while the fire flashed in his great dark eyes and burnt in his swarthy cheek. And she? She was as bold as a Medea, as calm as a Semiramis. His glance devoured her loveliness; but, with a gleaming dagger beneath the folds of her dress, she received the scorching admiration as if she had been marble.

"I have been surfeited with compliments," she said repellantly; "I want my liberty—I demand it. You will answer dearly for this cowardly treachery some day."

He answered in low tones that she was his captive, that a reign of pleasure lay before her if she so elected. If she refused he intimated that the chief of his eunuchs possessed a specific for disobedience. Her reply was a scornful stage-laugh. A flush of irritation came on his cheek as he answered:

"I did not come to threaten, but to persuade."

"You might have spared yourself the trouble," she answered with a haughty smile.

He bent towards her, his lips close to her golden hair, and, throwing his muscular arm around her waist, crushed her against his breast.

"Villain! coward! traitor!" cried she, freeing her beautiful right arm and raising the stiletto to strike.

He started back with glaring eyes.

"You refuse your beauty in exchange for my wealth," he savagely said; "so be it!"

And he strode across the soft carpet and left her. Listening at the door, she overheard him address Ishmael, the chief eunuch, in French:

"The captive is disobedient. Watch her well to-night; to-morrow the bowstring."

She was not alarmed, for she felt that the instructions were intended to be overheard by her for the purpose of intimidation. Moreover, as Arabi Pasha slept in the palace, she was less watched than usual, and she sat up late, cogitating on a plan of escape. To make her way out of the building did not seem a very difficult enterprise. The question was: What could she do even if she were outside?

Meantime the agitation consequent on her disappearance kept increasing in Alexandria. Demetrius Follett talked and threatened and offered rewards for her recovery. The French Consul had several interviews with Arabi Pasha, and was completely misled by the Mohammedan fox. But Henri Campi, the tenor of the Paris Company, believing that the Pasha was solely responsible, constituted himself a detective and watched the great man's movements. Consequently, when he stole away from Alexandria to visit his beautiful captive at Tantah, Campi, disguised as an Arab, followed in his train.

As Genieve sat, with her cheek in her hand, gazing over the gray gloom of the desert, pondering as to her course of action, suddenly on the stillness rose the subdued chant of a voice and a strain she well knew. The warm blood rushed to her cheek, her eyes filled and her lips trembled, for she knew that beneath her window Henry Campi—the only man for whom she had ever experienced a scintilla of affection—stood singing, in subdued telegraphic tones, "Le sabre de mon pere!" It was enough. Help was at hand. She opened the window, put out her beautiful head, and said:

"Henri, you there?"

"Yes, Genieve, I am here."

"What shall I do to reach you?"

"Jump, if you can trust me."

In another second his arms were around her.

What more needs be said, except that they escaped and were married, in spite of Arabi Pasha's furious remonstrance! They were married at the French Consul's house.

"Do you know, Genieve," says her husband at the breakfast-table, "I don't believe Arabi Pasha would ever have become such a furious defender of El Islam against giaour encroachment but for his acquaintance with you."

"But you don't mean to hold me responsible for the terrible massacres!" cries Genieve, raising her charming eyebrows.

"Well, maybe no, and—maybe—that is, partly—yes," quoth Henri.

MISS ADA REHAN

was born in London, Eng., and at the age of seven came hither with her sisters, Kate (now Mrs. O. D. Byron) and Hattie (Mrs. Fulton Russell). She made her first appearance in Newark, N. J., playing as an experiment a character in "Across the Continent" with her brother-in-law. She then decided to enter the profession, and during the season of 1875-6 she was engaged at Mrs. Drew's Arch-street Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. The following season she played in Macauley's Theatre, Louisville, Ky., and in 1878-9 was a member of John W. Albaugh's company, playing in Albany, N. Y., and Baltimore, Md. When Augustin Daly produced "L'Assommoir" for the first time in America, in the Olympic Theatre, this city, April 30, 1879, she acted Clemence, and during the second week of its run replaced Miss Emily Rigl as Virginie. She joined the company of Daly's Theatre when it was opened, Sept. 17 of that year, and acted Nelly Beers in the comedietta of "Love's Young Dream," which preceded the farcical comedy of "Newport." During that season she acted Kitty in "An Arabian Night," Donna Leonora in "Wives," and Mrs. Clyde Monogram in "The Way We Live." During the season of 1880-1 she added to her reputation by her charming performances of the title-character in "Tiote," Eva in "Our First Families," Silena in "Needles and Pins," and Psyche in "Cinderella at School." The past season she acted Marie de Mancini in "Royal Youth," Telka in "The Passing Regiment," and the title-role in "Odette." She is now playing Kate Verity in "The Squire," and it is one of her best impersonations.

BLOOMING PROSPERITY.

A few days ago a drummer for one of our wholesale houses was traveling in a buggy along a country road in Arkansas, when he came upon a tall, roughly-dressed man sitting upon a rail-fence whittling. With a sociable "Good-morning" the traveler drew up his horse and asked:

"Is that your field of corn over there?"

"Wal, I calkilate I'll freeze onto a right smart sheer of it. I'm working the piece on sheers."

"Looks like a fine crop."

"It does."

"I presume you are figuring on great prosperity in future, such immense crops indicating plenty for all."

"Prosperity? Stranger, that haint no name for the cyclone that's agoin' to hit this settlement atween the eyes this season. A tornado mout come jist now an' land every durned bit o' grainin the county over into Tennessee, an' yit the smiles o' contentment 'd never shift off'n our faces!"

"Some unexpected good luck has befallen you," the tourist replied.

"That's the play to a t-y ty. We're gettin' our slice o' the millennium away ahead o' the advertised date. Fust, ol' Zack Bolton up an' died last month, an' thar' hasn't been a ear o' corn or a side o' bacon missed in the community since we tumbled the dirt on top o' him. Then Wash Tompkins, the boss ol' sledge-player, got sent to State-prison fur horse stealin', thus givin' us poor players a show fur our pile; then Snaky, the saloon-keeper up at the forks o' the road, dropped down to ten cents a drink fur whiskey, and said he'd take corn same as cash; then my ol' woman ran off with a Yankee sewin'-machine peddler, an' my darter Sal got religion an' joined Mt. Zion Church, an' if bloomin prosperity aint a hangin' over the neighborhood I'm a gilt-edged liar from the Red River swamps. Got any sweet tobacker about you?"—Evansville Argus.

ENGLAND has a blind Postmaster-general, who fills the post with unprecedented success, and last year a blind man ascended Mont Blanc. What seems almost as remarkable is that, according to The Wolverhampton Chronicle for 1792, "one Briscoe, manager of a small theatrical company, though stone blind, plays all the heroes in his tragedies, and the lovers in all genteel comedies."

HOW THE EGGS WERE TO BE HATCHED.—I have read or heard somewhere the following: An Irish bailiff, accustomed to send a faithful account of the state of domestic arrangements, added in his letter to his master: "We have a large number of emu eggs, which, in your lordship's absence, I have set under a goose."—Belgravia.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

NO REPLIES BY MAIL OR TELEGRAPH.

☞ QUESTIONS THAT DO NOT REACH THIS OFFICE UNTIL TUESDAY MORNING WILL NOT BE ANSWERED UNTIL THE FOLLOWING WEEK.

B. J. H., Fort Wayne.—1. It was not a call, B's throwing his odd chip into the pot and then catching hold of a new pile as if with the design of raising. A's hurried action in calling out his hand was evidently suggested by a desire to prevent B's raising him and had the raise been two chips, instead of one, when B tossed in but his odd chip, A might have chosen to be content with the half-bet, rather than risk a raise. If he had wanted to be raised, he would not have been content with B's action, but would have asked him what he meant to do. Actions without words are usually of as little moment at poker as words without money; and a player can never be the sole arbiter as to the action of an opponent. When A saw B with his hand on his stack, he should have asked him whether he meant to call or not. He could not, by hurriedly calling out the contents of his own hand, deprive him of his right to bet in a case where he had not said what he intended to do, and where his action suggested that he did not mean to call. 2. The word "dessicated" cannot properly be used to denote "boneless." It means dried. 3. "In a boat are your wife and mother" and "In a boat is your wife and mother" may both be proper. The latter cannot be proper save in that rare case when the woman happens to be both the wife and the mother of the person spoken to.

C. R. W., Galveston.—As a matter of fact, there will be more large hands out in a six-handed game of poker than in a three-handed game. There will of course be more small hands, also, so that the large hands will not be proportionately increased, unless at draw poker, and then that increase will so depend upon the peculiarities of those players who will stay and draw when others would back out that there can be no reliable estimate. Indeed, at draw-poker mathematics are defied in this particular respect after original hands have been dealt and compared. There can be no decision of the bet as stated, unless both sides are agreed that by "more large hands" was meant absolutely more, without any reference to the increased number of small ones. In that event the first sentence of this answer will decide.

J. O. H. N.—An "earned run" is a run earned by safe hits before three chances for outs have been given off the pitching. A clean home-run made by the first, second or third striker is an example. A "life" is given a batsman when a fielder fails to accept a chance given him off the bat to put the batsman out. A "sacrifice-hit"—equivalent to a base-hit—is made when the batsman hits the ball so that the fielder is obliged to throw him out at first base, thereby giving a base-runner a chance to get round. A "triple bagger" is a slang term for a three base hit. An error is committed when a plain chance is offered a fielder to catch the batsman out, or to throw out the base-runner, or, in fact, when a fielder in any way fails to accept a chance to put an opponent out.

T. J., St. Louis.—You answer the question yourself. The count is high, low, jack and the game, in that order, because the game, which is the fundamental part of sancho pedro, is called high low jack and-the-game; and in the later game the count is sancho ahead of pedro, not only because sancho is worth nearly twice as much as pedro, and will beat it, but also because the play is called sancho pedro. The notion that pedro should count before sancho is the result of an error, instead of acknowledging and correcting which those who made it have tried to cover it up by seeking to change the name of the game to pedro-sancho.

HARLEM.—A is wrong. On the same principle that is the basis of his claim, B would pass by every spot east or west of him in Christendom, either in a direct or an oblique line. Passing by a house in common acceptation is to go by it on the sidewalk on which it fronts, or in the street, or possibly even on the opposite sidewalk; but no house or street can be permitted to intervene. Common acceptation governs. In one sense, B may have passed by West minster Abbey, London, when he walked through our Post-office; but he did not pass it sufficiently for him to lose a bet made as to his passing or not passing it.

IRVING, Boston.—Usage is divided upon that point. In some circles A could throw away, thus leaving to his next opponent the right to avail himself of any card in the pile, regardless of C.'s mind, as A and C are really one; in others, A would have to take in the pile if he could take in no other, or could not make a new build; and in others, again, it is left to the opponent to decide whether the pile shall be left and used by him or taken in by A. We prefer the third course, as it applies as well to the partner game as to the single-handed.

S. F. K., Evanston.—The ballot was proper enough, there having been eighteen voters and eighteen votes. As to the legality of the transaction, the convention, and not D or Le C, was the judge of that. There would have been some chance for the convention to act, had some member of it claimed that he had cast only a blank vote, as in that event some other member might have put in two ballots for Le C.

T. C. M.—No; it is not a rule of New York commission merchants to allow one dozen for breakage on every case of eggs sold on best stock or any other stock. Sometimes the breakage allowances will range from six to twenty-four; but, when sold at the "mark," no allowance is made. Then, again, when the market is glutted with this kind of "fruit" the breakage allowances may range all the way to thirty per case.

SUBSCRIBER.—1. Walter Scott wrote a "Life of Napoleon Bonaparte" about 1827. 2. That question we cannot consider. It is not likely that Frenchmen and Englishmen would agree upon that subject; and it is likely, inasmuch as that work is said to have brought Scott in ninety thousand dollars, that he wrote with an eye to the British market.

WASH, Brooklyn.—The cards falling 4, jack, 4, 5, 2, 3, there is a run of four. You have evidently omitted an ace, as you give the total as 29 and claim a run of five, which there is if the ace fell anywhere after the jack.

F. T., Toronto.—According to the last census the population of London, Eng., was 3,814 571; Manchester and Salford, 517,741; Birmingham, 400,757; Paris, France (estimated), over 2,000 000; Brooklyn, N. Y. (1880), 566,689; Pekin, China (estimated), 500,000.

ACTON, Jersey City.—1. C. E. Courtney never defeated Ed. Hanlan in a scullers' race. 2. Each is credited with the best recorded time, but at different distances. Hanlan's was made in rowing alone, and Courtney's was made in a race.

K. S., Jersey City.—If the party who bet that he could name the winner failed to pick out the successful contestant at the time of making the wager, he lost his money. He could not win by naming all of the starters.

OLD READER.—1. Egan, late pitcher of the Troy Club, is not a pugilist. 2. Clapp has been re-engaged by the Metropolitans. 3. Lynch and Brady have signed with Mutrie's New York Club for 1883. 4. Ward, O'Neil and Welch.

SCOREKEEPER, Baltimore.—1. Blakiston played third-base, Kensil centre-field and Greenwood right field for the Athletics at the close of their championship season. 2. Sullivan and Crotty caught and Brown guarded right-field for the St. Louis Browns.

BRISTOL HOUSE.—Yes. Daniel O'Leary beat P. Napoleon Campana in a six day go-as-you-please race at what is now Madison-square Garden Dec. 23 to 28, 1878. O'Leary covered 400 1-9 miles and Campana 357¼ miles.

KIRBY.—Tim Collins fought the following men in England before he came to this country: Jerry Hawkes, Bob Furze, Joe Bent, Pickett, Hatton's Spider, Dackham, Cronin, Jem Rawlins and Bill Gillam.

H. H. W., St. Louis.—Three fours and two sixes beat three aces and a pair of threes at poker-dice, save where it has been agreed that aces shall rate higher than sixes.

M. R., Brooklyn.—1. The Chicagos won the League championship. 2. Eight clubs will be members of the League in 1883. 3. It is doubtful about the reorganization of the Atlantics next season.

S. A. G., Newark.—George W. Lee's first professional race was with John A. Kennedy, at Greenwood Lake, June 7, 1879. Kennedy won by four lengths.

CHARLEY M., Canandaigua.—The greatest distance ever traveled during the first twenty-four hours of a six-day pedestrian contest was 150 miles 390 yards, by C. Rowell.

H. C.—We do not remember that O'Leary ever engaged in such a contest. He walked matches here with Wilson Reid and John Dewitt, respectively, before he met Harry Vaughan.

PATRON, Newark.—If Rowell was not ahead at the hour of mid night on the day named, the man who bet he was lost. See table elsewhere.

A READER, Toronto.—If he receives a salary from the club for rowing, or taking charge of boats, etc., that fact debars him from rowing as an amateur.

C. A. H., Bangor.—As crack-loo is variously played, in some places that would be called a draw; in others that one would win whose coin has its centre nearer to the line than the other's is.

E. STINDE, St. Louis.—We do not know the whereabouts of Keenan, the late catcher of the Allegheny.

STERLTON.—Jack Rooke, the pugilist, died at Manchester, Eng., Nov 25, 1881.

H. M., Willimantic.—Unless recently started, there are no newspapers published there.

T. L. E., Bridgeport.—A wins if the numbers in the lottery are from one to seventy-eight; and usually they are.

J. H McL., Brantford.—Address the International News Co., 31 Beekman street, New York.

J. L. C.—A note addressed to the office of the engineer of the bridge might elicit the information.

O. K., Billerica.—We will mail you an ALMANAC on receipt of price, 15 cents.

IRISH COMEDIAN, Providence.—A card of size desired would cost $8. The column is over two inches wide.

H. S., Warren.—B's low could not count until high had been counted. B was skunked. A wins.

J. B., Brooklyn.—1. No answers by mail. 2. The counties on Long Island are Kings, Queens and Suffolk.

C. G., Coshocton.—If you have any dispute, state it so that we can have a clue to beginning a search for the oldest chartered city.

KINGS, Westfield.—He was playing poker when he took the place of another in the game, whether he bet or not.

A. L., Mandan.—If the fall is 4, 3, 5, 6, 2, there is a run of five for the deuce.

J. L. S.—1. The Great Eastern never got nearer Hell Gate than Flushing. 2. She has arrived here several times—June 28, 1860, first.

H. W.—There is no hole in the quarter-piece if what was a hole has been plugged up.

R. B., Cobourg.—When straight flushes are played by agreement they beat four of a kind. Otherwise they are valueless.

CIGAR BOY, Oswego.—The difference in time between this city and Chicago is about fifty-four minutes, Chicago being behind.

J. W. K., Toronto.—He would have to reside here five years to vote.

W. R. S.—Pronounced mu nus; paternity, accent on fourth syllable.

L. F. W., New Haven.—We will give the pitching averages shortly.

J. H., Buffalo.—It was the same Pilot that fought Cub in Kentucky.

F. Z.—There are no data by which that point can be determined.

A. G. LANGHAM, Louisville.—We cannot deviate from our rules.

SUBSCRIBER, Brooklyn.—William M. Tweed died April 12, 1878.

HEIGHT.—Charles Rowell's height in stocking-feet is 5ft. 6in.

READER, Boston.—A is pool on 56, if B has three scratches.

J. L., Detroit.—His opponents score two for a ench e.

W. O. M., Ravenna.—Thanks; but we do not need one.

F. L., Worcester.—We believe it is an English firm.

P. J. B., Baltimore.—We know of no such paper.

N. R.—Andrew Johnson was impeached.

C. J. S.—B can freeze out A at any stage.

A. P. C., Cincinnati.—The list referred to is incorrect in many respects. In the first place, the League was not organized until 1876; O'Rourke and Addy, who played with the Boston nine in 1873, and Will White of the Boston team of 1877 are not even named in said list; and the positions of the Providence team of 1879 are nearly all incorrectly given.

J. A., New Orleans.—Either may be right. There are two kinds of measurement, one being over-all and the other near the waterline. Our practice in answering questions as to the length of the Great Eastern or of any other vessel that is inaccessible to us is to qualify. Thus we answer of the Great Eastern that her length is "about 690ft."

SIXTY.—In sancho-pedro, as you name the game you were playing, the order of counting is not as you say it is in your postscript. It is high, low, jack, game, sancho and pedro, and B was not out. When you wish to make the five of prior value to the nine, you can call the game pedro sancho; but the original and true game with sancho in it is sancho-pedro.

J. B. C., Boston.—Ed. Hanlan and J. H. Riley rowed a dead heat in a regatta race at Barrie, Ont., in the Summer of 1879, and as Hanlan (who claimed to have really won) declined to row over, Riley went over the course and took first money. The distance was considerably short of the announced four miles, and therefore the time given out goes for nothing, and of course was not recorded.

THOS. G., Brunswick.—Tom Sayers beat Cranch. Collins, Jack Grant, Jack Martin, Sims, Harry Poulson, Aaron Jones, Bill Perry, Bill Benjamin (twice), Tom Paddock and Bob Brettle. He was beaten by Nat Langham and fought a draw with Heenan. He also fought two unfinished battles with Collins and Jones, darkness causing an adjournment.

POLKEY, Bridgeport.—1. Three races for the Astley belt and championship of the world took place in this city. Which of them do you refer to? 2. C. Rowell twice competed for that belt in England, winning it both times.

FRANKS.—Such bets are decided on the principle that the greater includes the less, and as Fitzgerald got first place the man who bet that he would not get second lost.

JOS. M., Chrichsville.—The bet having been made subsequent to the withdrawal of Rowell, it is void, and the money should be returned. The fact that neither bettor knew that he had retired from the race has no bearing on the wager. No replies by mail.

R. W. S., Philadelphia.—The time given, 1m. 5s and 1m. 5⅖s., represents the record made by the respective companies in running 220 yards to truck, the same distance back with truck (440 yards in all) and putting men on platform. You win the "fiver."

J. R., Providence.—If the bet was made subsequent to the time at which Rowell last left the track (see table in this issue), then it is void. If made before then, the man who bet on him loses.

F. B.—That was a contest that was decided by distance covered; and as Hazael traveled 413⅓ miles and Rowell but 384⅔ miles, the man who bet that Hazael would beat Rowell won.

D. D.—See Athletic department. The challenges contained in letter are omitted for the reason that you neglected to deposit a forfeit.

READER, Fremont.—Refer your question to the Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

H. K., Milwaukee.—Cannot say. The ball committee did not publish the figures.

GEORGE B., West Philadelphia.—See THE CLIPPER ALMANAC for 1882, page 56, under head of "Butchering."

BURTON ATHLETES.—Your card would cost $2 each time, displaying it a little.

F. F. S.—The American News Co., 39 and 41 Chambers street, New York, can supply your wants.

M. J., Denver.—The Alaska burns on an average 200 tons of coal a day, the City of Rome the same, and the Arizona averages 125 tons.

W. C. L., Rockport.—You can get mining machinery, etc., of Justin R. Wells, 88 Liberty street, New York.

W. M. L., Schenevus.—He should have picked his man at the time the bet was made, and, failing to do so, he loses.

J. T. C., Drummondville.—Look again, and you will find the card at head of second column on page 515, CLIPPER dated Oct. 28.

J. F. K.—The Metropolitan Club will represent New York City in the League next season.

G. M., Baltimore.—The best six-day pedestrian record is 600 miles 220 yards, by George Hazael.

B. C. W., New Brighton.—We have not learned of the death of the party mentioned, and believe him to be still alive.

H. F. P., Boston.—Two sixes and two fives beat two aces and two fours at poker dice, or at any other kind of dice.

W., Baltimore.—Brouthers and Start for the League, and Browning and Latham for the American Association.

COHN, Auburn.—At the time you wrote, Oct. 25, Rowell's best record in a six day race was 566 miles 63 yards.

J. R., Montreal.—We never heard of such a performance, which is out of all reason. See records in THE CLIPPER ALMANAC.

BEDFORD.—You will find the informat on you want in the "Manual of Sporting Rules," obtainable from Ed. James, as per card.

P. S., Elmira.—See record of the mel enraged in last week's race, which were published in THE CLIPPER dated Oct. 28.

CHARLEY, Chicago.—At the time you wrote, Oct. 24, no one besides G. Hazael had traveled 600 miles on foot in six consecutive days.

WM. H. T., Philadelphia.—Charles Rowell was born Aug. 12, 1853.

CO. C, Fort Fills.—It is a matter of divided opinion.

NO SIGNATURE, Newark, N. J.—Vol. 26 out of print.

A M S., Minneapolis.—Not until it is finished.

MANHATTAN.—Consult a physician.

J. J. E.—No; out of print.

ATHLETIC.

CHALLENGE FROM HOMAN.

We hold twenty-five dollars on account of the following:

BOSTON, MASS., Oct. 30, 1882.

EDITOR CLIPPER.—I hereby challenge the following runners to run me the races mentioned below for $500 a side, in two or three weeks from signing articles; the races to be play or pay, and I will give or take expenses, or meet half-way, each paying his own expenses, but the race must be run straightaway: Fred Stone, 2 0yds.; Kittleman, 300yds.; F. J. McQuigin, 300yds.; Ed. Tisdale, 400yds.; or I will take five yards from McQuigin in 200yds. Yours, respectfully,

FRANK W. HOMAN.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL.—The exciting Autumnal sport of "kicking the leather" was engaged in by several college teams on Saturday, Oct. 28. At New Brunswick, N. J., Yale won by five goals to one touchdown for Rutgers, the former team being obliged to make one safety touchdown—a new experience to them. At Princeton, N. J., Princeton won by a score of nine goals and three touchdowns to nothing. At Springfield, Mass., Wesleyan beat Amherst by a score of one goal and two touchdowns to one touchdown and two safetys. On Oct. 25, at Cambridge, Mass., the Harvard eleven defeated the team from the Institute of Technology by three goals and four touchdowns to nothing. On the 28th, at Brookline, Mass., the Harvard freshmen defeated the Roxbury Latin team by two goals to nix.

THE CLEVELAND (O.) BICYCLE CLUB held a field-meeting at Perkins' track Oct. 24. The five-mile race, for the club medal, was won by George Collister, in 18m. 48s. The mile-heat race, best two in three, was won by W. H. Wetmore. F. P. Root taking the first heat. Time, 3m. 30½s., 3m. 35½s., 3m. 36¾s. The half-mile race in heats, best two in three, was won by J. D. Pugh. Time, 1m. 39¼s., 1m. 41s. The half-mile contest for tricycles, the first race of the kind in the West, was taken by J. H. Collister. Time, 2m. 31s. The half-mile dash, hands off, was captured by W. H. Wetmore. Time, 1m. 30⅛s. The non-winners' race, mile dash, was secured by T. S. Beckwith. Time, 3m. 26⅛s.

LONG-DISTANCE BICYCLING.—Thomas S. Webb, Nate Cogswell and D. B. Smith, members of the Lawrence (Mass.) Bicycle Club, on Oct. 27, at 12.27 A. M., started from Young's Hotel, Boston, and, riding in and out on various roads, covered a distance of 169¼ miles in 23h. 18m., the actual riding time being 17h. 15m.

P. F. FERRIS has resigned his position as superintendent of the Union Gymnasium, Boston, Mass., and the management have secured the services of Dr. D. A. Sargent as medical director and F. C. Lister as superintendent. These gentlemen have had extended experience in the Harvard gymnasium.

JOHN GALLAGHER offers fifty dollars in prizes for a 440yds. handicap at Pastime Park, Philadelphia, Nov. 20. See advertisement for particulars.

STUYVESANT LORING JR. won a ten-mile walk at Ocean Drive, Newport, R. I., Oct. 26, his time being 1h. 49m. 30s., and he beating about a dozen competitors.

WHAT DINNIE WILL DO.—Donald Dinnie requests us to announce that he will make either of the following matches: First, that he will throw a hammer (the head to weigh 16lb) over 100ft.; second, that he will throw a hammer (head to weigh 16lb) over 120ft.; third, that he will throw a hammer (head to weigh 12lb) over 140ft. All of these feats to be done "fair stand," Scotch style, and on level ground. Considering that Dinnie is now some 12ft. short of his records of ten years ago, this seems a favorable opportunity for disbelievers in great feats to see them done or win by the result.

A BICYCLE TOURNAMENT took place at the Driving-park at Port Jervis, N. J., Oct. 28. Many people were present, the weather was fine and the track good. Mile. Armaindo rode three-quarters of a mile against a trotter (to go a mile), the horse winning two of the three heats. W. J. Morgan beat T. W. Eck in a five-mile race; and a half-mile amateur race, for a gold medal, had five starters, and was won by Frank Meivern, in 1m. 35s. and 1m. 36s.

WILLIAM DUTCHER, erstwhile a long-distance pedestrian, has turned from the folly of his ways, and is now building shoes in a factory at North Adams, Mass.

HARVARD ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION.

The Fall meeting of this association took place at Jarvis field, Cambridge, Mass., on Saturday afternoon, Oct 28. The weather was all that could be desired, but the attendance was very poor. The meeting was far from being a success, and shows very plainly that Harvard indifference is still an assured fact. The quality of the new men, and in fact of all who participated in the meeting, was far below what could have been presented. There were forty-six entries in fourteen events, and eight of these were for the 100yds. dash—a very poor showing. In certain sports, as will be seen, there was a limit put, but why it does not appear, for it surely did not induce men to enter and detracted from the enjoyment of the occasion. The standing high-jump was omitted, as was the bicycle-race. If Harvard has any idea of winning the cup next year there must be a vast improvement shown at the Spring meeting. The records were all poor. Return:

One-mile walk—Entries: F. B. Fogg, '85; C. A. Brown, '86; S. H. Blodgett, '84; D. W. Baxter, '85; and H. N. Cole, '85. Fogg led and was cautioned in the first lap. He then settled down and continued to lead until the third lap, when he was passed first by Brown and then by Baxter. Brown finished in 8m. 59s. Blodgett gained second place after a warm brush with Baxter.

Throwing the hammer (70ft. limit)—N. C. Denniston, '83, 67ft.; C. M. Field, '84, 65ft. 6in.

One-hundred-yards run (11s. limit)—First heat: Starters, W. H. Goodwin Jr., '84; G. S. Tyler, '85; R. D. Smith Jr., '86. Goodwin won, Smith second. No time was taken, as the timers lost the start. Second heat: Starters, S. Cary, '86; A. H. Morris, S. S.; and W. A. Stebbins, '86; Cary won in 11¼s., Morris second. Final heat: Won by Goodwin, in 10⅝s.; Cary second, Smith third.

Running high jump—Competitors: G. B. Morison, '83; G. C. Denniston, '83; and W. H. Stebbins, '86. Won by G. B. Morison, 5ft. 3in.

One-hundred-and-twenty-yards hurdle-race—Starters: H. F. Mandell, '84; G. R. Agassiz, '84; and S. Cary, '86. The race was prettily contested by Cary and Agassiz, the latter winning by a yard in 19⅛s.

Half-mile run (2m. 10s. limit)—Starters: G. B. Morison, '83; P. L. Livingston, '85; and J. D. Bradley, '86. Morison had almost a walkover, in 2m. 8s.; Livingston second.

One-hundred-yards dash—Starters: G. R. Agassiz, '84, and S. Baker, '86. It was amusing to see Agassiz sprint at the top of his speed, while Baker trotted just ahead of him all the way, winning, hands down, in 11⅛s.

Running long-jump—H. F. Mandell, '84, first, 18ft.; L. Lincoln Jr., '86, second, 17ft. 2in.

Two-hundred-and-twenty-yards dash—Starters: W. Baker, '86; W. A. Stebbins, '86; and H. E. Chase, '85. Baker won as he pleased, in 28⅛s., Stebbins at his heels.

One-mile run (5m. limit)—Starters: R. H. Delafield, S. S.; J. B. Walker, '84; S. Coolidge, '86; and W. H. Page Jr., '83. Page led for three and a half laps, when Delafield, who had been playing with his men, went ahead, and won in 5m. 17⅛s.; Walker second, Coolidge a poor third.

Putting the shot (30ft. limit)—J. C. Bachelder, '83, first, 29ft.; A. C. Denniston, '83, second, 27ft. 5in.

Quarter-mile run—Starters: N. G. Locke, '86; W. Baker, '86; L. R. E. Paulin, '84; W. F. Werselhoeft, '81; and G. G. Bradford, '86. Baker won with his usual ease, despite the violent efforts of his competitors. Time, 55s.

Pole-vault—A. F. Mandell, '84, first, 7ft. 10in.; H. G. Chase, '83, second, 7ft. 6in.

The 100-yards and 220-yards dashes, open for football men, did not fill, so a fifth-of-a-mile hurdle-race, open to all, was started. Twenty-three came to the post, most of them in everyday attire. Morris, S. S., won. This event was very amusing, and created the most laughter and enjoyment of any event of the day. The officers were: Referee, Dr. D. A. Sargent; judges—Prof. C. A. Lanman, Prof. J. W. White and E. W. Atkinson, '81; timekeepers—M. S. Orebore, '82, and E. E. Merrill; starter—T. J. Coolidge, Jr. '84; measurers—H. B. Cabot, '84, and E. Thayer, '85; scorer, C. H. Atkinson, '85; clerk, W. M. Been, '84; assistant clerk, A. F. French, '85. Baker, who won the 100 and 220 yards dashes and the quarter-mile run, is a cousin of Wendell, the Harvard sprinter of '82, and in running resembles him greatly. He has won every event he has contested at Harvard with ridiculous ease, and bids fair to be a phenomenon. He runs easily, and in comparison with his antagonists seemed to go no faster than a jog. Delafield promises well for the mile run. '85 distinguished itself in this meeting by receiving only one prize, the second in the half-mile run. '86 won six first and two second prizes; '83, four first and one second; '84, three first and four second; '85, one second prize.

THE CHAMPIONS' RACE.

Fitzgerald First, Noremac Second, Herty Third and Hughes Fourth.

What will in all probability be the final important six-day race that will ever be gotten up in this vicinity closed at Madison-square Garden on Saturday evening, Oct. 28. Notwithstanding the splendid work done by the majority of the competitors, and that the fight for the lead during the greater part of the week was the most determined and long sustained ever witnessed in a contest of this description, the affair was financially a lamentable failure, and those who have done such hard work will find themselves but poorly paid for the pains and penalties they have endured during the week. This is poor encouragement for either pedestrians or those who have been identified with the business management of such entertainments; and as greater attractions in the shape of high-class performers were on this occasion presented than in any previous similar race, the fact that it was not a success may be accepted as evidence that the public, who her tofore have flocked by thousands to exhibitions of long-distance pedestrianism, have finally become sated with such displays. It is probable, therefore, that the people of New York will now be afforded an opportunity to enjoy a protracted rest from entertainments which have lost all power to charm the dollars from their pockets in quantities sufficient to make it an object to those who provide the oil for the working of the expensive machinery of such shows, or to those who furnish the legpower which forms the attraction. During the first three days following the opening-night the patronage extended was surprisingly light, evenings as well as during the afternoons, and the withdrawal of the two English cracks, Rowell and Hazael, on Thursday dashed the hopes of those who had anticipated a large increase in public interest, which would manifest itself in a very noticeable swelling of the box-office receipts during the latter part of the week. Rowell quit because he was physically unable to continue without danger to himself, and Hazael was at last obliged to succumb to an injured and swollen knee, with the pain of which he had wrestled for some hours. Their retirement unquestionably deprived the contest of much of the interest that was felt in it, and thereafter the show was even duller than previously, and everybody in any way connected with it was glad when the end was reached. Although the work done on the track by the foremost men in the race was highly creditable to their abilities as long-distance pedestrians, the records made by Rowell and Hazael in the phenomenal contest which terminated at the same place in March last were surpassed in only three or four instances, where the time of intermediate miles was beaten. Hughes' exertions during the first day told their inevitable tale on him, as they had on Rowell in the last preceding race, and on the fourth day he cracked, losing the lead in the forenoon to Fitzgerald, who retained it, adding to his advantage to the end. Noremac, Herty and Hart subsequently in succession passed Hughes, but the latter held to the track, and by sheer pluck and resolution finally gained the right to share in the net gate-receipts, which, under the circumstances, is something for him to boast of, although his portion of the spoils will fall far short of paying his expenses. Fitzgerald was a very tired man at the close, but yet, had the necessity demanded it, he could have added a number of miles to his score, and possibly might have beaten the existing record, as he traveled but 84 miles 1,320 yards on the fifth day and 60 miles 1,540 yards on the sixth. Noremac on this occasion raised his record from 565 miles 495 yards to 566 miles 880 yards, but he was seemingly not in as good condition at the close as in either of his previous big races. Herty fell fifteen miles behind his previous best performance, although he might have headed it considerably had he been more industrious throughout, for he was by odds the strongest and easiest-moving man upon the sawdust on Saturday night, and it does not appear that he suffered from any ailment during the week. The excuse given for Hart's withdrawal was that he had suffered from a cold in the limbs, contracted on Monday night, which stiffened him up and prevented him from running with any freedom or getting a good place; so, not seeing any money in it, he concluded to quit between two and three o'clock on the morning of the last day. Vint, who betrayed a lack of beef, strength and speed combined to shine in such a brilliant company, stopped on Friday evening because he saw he could not win anything; while Panchot, late in the afternoon of the third day, undertook a task that to him had long since become altogether hopeless, he having been last to gain admission to the competition and the first to cry quits. Heretofore it has been customary in important and well-conducted races of this kind to make public daily the amount of the receipts for the preceding twenty-four hours, and in the contest of Feb. 27 to March 4 last a return was made each morning to the parties most directly interested—the pedestrians themselves—not only of the cash taken in during the preceding day, but of the number of each of the different kind of free tickets received by the door-keepers. All this was shown in plain figures, and the men knew precisely where they stood in regard to money matters, and could at any time tell approximately what the successful contestants would receive for their labors. They were not kept in the dark regarding a matter that was of special interest to them, and of course the plain statements thus regularly submitted caused them to feel that they were receiving fair treatment, and encouraged them to persevere. Why this undeniably proper mode of procedure should not have been followed last week we are at a loss to understand. At no time during the week were the competitors made acquainted with the state of the concern's finances, and it was not to be wondered at that in consequence of this unwise plan of action discontent was added to disappointment where it was desirable that confidence should be inspired and encouragement given. The subjoined tables (the first being continued from where we left off last week) tell the story of the race in plain language. Only the miles and laps are given, the distance traversed by the men in going from the scorers' stand to their quarters, varying from 150 to 190 yards, being omitted.

$1,000; referee, $1,000; representatives of the men, $1,000; scorers, $700. From this it will be observed that the receipts from the sale of privileges were $471 more than at the race last Spring, while the expenses were $1,382.25 greater than upon that occasion. There was evidently no auditing committee to examine the bills and, so far as possible, reduce the expenses, while all hands (except the pedestrians) were, notwithstanding the financial failure of the contest, more liberally paid than ever before, although consideration for the men who did the hard work on the track ought to have suggested the propriety of cutting down the scale of prices for services rendered.

BI-CENTENNIAL BICYCLING.

Four hundred and eighty bicyclists took part in the exercises held at Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, Oct. 26, the same being one of the attractive features of the Bi-Centennial Celebration. The route lay from the Columbia-avenue entrance to the Park almost due north past Edgley, Strawberry Mansion and Laurel Hill to the Falls of Schuylkill, the visitors being thus afforded an opportunity to feast their eyes on some of the most picturesque portions of Philadelphia's great breathing-place. Crossing the river at the Falls, the wheelmen rode down the western bank until nearly opposite Strawberry Mansion, thence proceeding through the Park to George's Hill. A banquet at Belmont Mansion followed the parade, and after a club-drill by Captain Fowler and members of the Capitol Bicycle Club of Washington, D. C., the trials of speed were in order, resulting as follow: One-mile race—First heat: W. R. Pitman first, in 3m. 23⅛s. Second heat: E. A. Thomson first, in 3m. 30s. Final heat: Thomson first, in 3m. 9¼s. One mile race—C. A. Chickering first, in 3m. 20s.; B. G. Sanford second, 3m. 24s. Two-mile handicap—V. C. Place, scratch, first, in 6m. 50s.; E. A. Thomson, 100 yards, 0; W. H. Austin, 185, 0. Five-mile handicap—V. C. Place, scratch, first, in 16m. 58¾s.; E. Thomson, 265 yards, 0; Joseph Dyson, 400, 0; J. J. Burch Jr., 440, 0; Oscar Kline, 450, 0; C. J. Wilson, 450, 0. Half-mile race—V. C. Place first, in 1m. 30s.; W. W. Cone second, in 1m. 35¾s. Consolation-race, one mile—B. G. Sanford first.

MYERS vs. GEORGE.

The first of the series of international match races in which the respective amateur champions of America and England are to test their relative quality will come off at the Polo Grounds, this city, on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 4, the distance being half a mile. Both men have done all that was possible in the matter of preparatory work since our past issue, and they have improved in consequence, although the weather on several days has been unfavorable for out-door training. It would be well, we think, if the management were to defer the bicycle-race until after the international event is decided, as the wheels of the machines will certainly cut the track up to some extent, and it is desirable that the path should be in the best possible condition when the rival champions try conclusions. Jack Goulding is busily engaged preparing the track, and would be pleased to have both men call and inspect it, as he is anxious that both shall be satisfied.

GEORGE LITTLEWOOD publishes a challenge in The (London) Sporting Life to Daniel O'Leary, E. P. Weston and all others to walk six days, heel and toe, for $500 a side; to take place within five weeks from signing, or else after the lapse of three months.

THE PRINCETON and Columbia College football elevens play a match Nov. 7, at 3 P. M., at the Polo Grounds, and 20 the British Football Club of this city will play the Britannia Club of Montreal, P. Q., under the English Football Association rules.

A FIFTY-MILE go-as-you-please pedestrian contest, winner to take entrance-money ($25 each) and forty per cent. of gate-receipts, is announced to be given at Chicago, Ill., under the management of John McCormick. See advertisement.

E. A. HYDE announces that he will give prizes amounting to $125 for a 135yds. open handicap, to take place at Charter Oak Park, Hartford, Ct., Nov. 20. For particulars see advertisement.

GEO. HAZAEL, J. E. Warburton and C. Barnsley (trainer) will please call or send for letters at this office.

AQUATIC.

BI-CENTENNIAL REGATTA.

This event was successfully held on the Schuylkill River, at Philadelphia, Oct. 26, the spectators being numerous and weather conditions favorable, while the sport afforded by the participating oarsmen was interesting. A return follows, the races being all a mile and a half, straightaway:

Four-oared shells—Columbia B. C., Washington: F. M. Nesmith (bow), C. D. Davis, J. C. Kirtner, F. A. Nute (stroke), first, in 9m. 29s.; Fairmount B. C., Philadelphia: J. A. McMullin (bow), J. T. McLaughlin, W. H. Brownell, J. H. Boyer (stroke), second, by six lengths; Crescent B. C., Philadelphia: C. E. Steel (bow), M. W. Phillips, J. M. Andrews, C. E. Hallowell (stroke), a poor third.

McIntyre (coxswain), second, by three lengths.

The single-scull race unfortunately resulted in a walkover for Dempsey of the Fairmounts, J. Pilkington of the Metropolitans declining to start against him.

GAISEL DEFEATS ELLIOTT.

The race between William Elliott of England and George Gaisel of this city, for five hundred dollars, came off on the Passaic River, at Newark, N. J., on Monday, Oct. 23. Although the weather was quite unfavorable, the docks along the river were crowded with spectators. The tugboat C. Van Cott took members of the Metropolitan Boat Club to the sport, and the Fannie B. and other smaller boats followed the rowers over the course. Three miles was the distance, and the course was from the Erie R. R. bridge to the Midland bridge and return. Wm. F. Volk of the Eureka Club was appointed starter and referee, Wm. Clarke Jr. acted as judge for Elliott, and the judge for Gaisel was Wm. Nagle. Both men appeared to be in fairly good condition as they pulled up together for the start, which was made at 4.45 P. M. They kept well together for about a quarter of a mile, Elliott pulling a short, quick stroke, while Gaisel's was long and clean. A spurt was made by Elliott at the Eureka House, by which he gained the lead, but lost it again at the Triton House. Gaisel was then pulling 32 and Elliott 36. Elliott lost distance again at the turn, and allowed his opponent to lead all the way down the river, Gaisel winning at his ease by four lengths. No time taken.

RILEY DEFEATS TEN EYCK.

The scullers' race, three miles, with a turn, for two hundred and fifty dollars a side, some time ago arranged between James H. Riley of Saratoga and James A. Ten Eyck of Peekskill, took place on Monday afternoon, Oct. 30, on the Laureate course, above the State dam, at Troy, N. Y. The weather was excellent and the water in suitable condition. Several thousand persons assembled to witness the contest, for which Riley was the favorite at odds of $100 to $80—a state of betting which was fully justified by the previous performances of the men. Ten Eyck got about a length the advantage at the start, but he was speedily overtaken by the Saratogian, who easily passed to the front, had a lead of three lengths at the close of the first mile, and, although Ten Eyck gained by making a quicker turn, Riley opened the gap again without much trouble, ultimately winning, in hand, by four lengths, in the slow time of 24m. 5s. Referee and timer, Chas. S. Francis; judges—Frank E. Ten Eyck for his brother, and C. S. Grant for Riley; judge at finish, A. L. Barnes.

PULLMAN ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION.—The regatta held by the Pullman (Ill.) A. A. took place on Oct. 21, with the results herewith shown: Four-oared shells, two miles, turn—Pullman A. A.: William Dodd (bow), J. M. Price, D. R. Martin, O. L. Holmes (stroke) first, in 13m. 48s. Farragut B. C.: C. S. Downs (bow), Somes, G. T. Muchmore, J. E. Muchmore (stroke) second, by ten seconds. Single-scull working-boats, same course—E. T. Martin first, in 22m. 45s.; A. Boss second. Four-oared gigs, same course—J. M. Pierce (bow), E. Haseltine, Frank Lewis, O. L. Holmes (stroke), C. Bronson (coxswain), first, in 15m. 55s.; William Dodd (bow), M. Tichener, Moore, S. R. Martin (stroke), C. A. Needham (coxswain) second. Single-scull shells—J. E. Muchmore first, in 15m. 46½s.; C. E. Needham second and S. S. Beman third. Four-oared gigs, same course—Pullman A. A.: J. M. Pierce (bow), E. Haseltine, Frank Lewis, O. L. Holmes (stroke), C. Bronson (coxswain) first, in 15m. 47s. Delaware B. C.: J. F. Kort (bow), W. Weinaid, W. Sullivan, W. Platten (stroke), G. Saughenrich (coxswain) second.

WEISGERBER vs. BRICELAND.—The sculling-match between George W. Weisgerber and Wm. Briceland, to row three miles, with a turn, for five hundred dollars a side, was decided over the course on the Ohio River at Wellsburg, O., about six miles below Wheeling, West Va., on Saturday afternoon, Oct. 28. The stakes were won by Weisgerber, who came home three lengths ahead, in 21 minutes. There was an immense crowd of people present, representing Wheeling, Pittsburg and other cities.

YACHT-RACE.—The sweepstakes yacht-race projected by Capt. Jacob Smith of Tompkinsville, Staten Island, was sailed Oct. 27 in the waters of the Upper Bay. The entrance-fee was $25, three entered, and the course was from a boat anchored off Tompkinsville to and around Fort Lafayette, thence to and around buoy No. 17, off Robbins' Reef, and back, nine miles, to be sailed twice over. At starting the wind was light from south-southeast, and the tide the last of the ebb. Result: H. H. Holmes, 21ft. 11½in., sailed by Capt. S. Farrow, first, in 3h. 48m. 12s., actual sailing time; Excelsior, 21ft. 11½in., sailed by Capt. Jacob Smith, second, in 3h. 49m. 45s.; By-and-Bye, 21ft. 11½in., sailed by Captain Ira Smith, third, in 3h. 50m. 33s. During the second round the competing vessels had both a calm and the flood-tide to contend against, which rendered the closing part of the race very tedious and uninteresting.

FANJOY vs. BRITT.—A single-scull race, for one hundred dollars a side, three miles, with a turn, was rowed by William Fanjoy and George Britt on the Kennebeccasis River, at St. John, N. B., on Monday, Oct. 23. The race was easily won by Fanjoy in 25m., one minute and fifteen seconds ahead. Judges—R. J. Nagle and R. Wisted Jr.; referee, John Walsh.

THE LIVONIA, the well-known schooner-yacht, 280 tons, built in 1871 for James Ashbury at a cost of $125,000, and which competed that year for the America Cup, was sold by auction Oct. 9 at Lloyd's Captain's rooms, London, and was bought by Wm. Turner.

EDWARD ROSS and Hugh McCormack of St. John, N. B., are matched to row a race on the Kennebeccasis Nov. 13. Fanjoy challenges the winner to row over the same course on the following day.

COURTNEY vs. LEE.—No word has yet been received from George W. Lee regarding the challenge from C. E. Courtney, and as the latter is tired waiting for the Newarker to show his hand the deposit posted with us has been withdrawn. The money will, however, be forthcoming whenever Lee manifests a disposition to make a match.

FRED PLAISTED is now in Cincinnati, O., where he will probably appear during the present week at the Vine-street Opera house in the character of a club-swinger. Afterwards he will join Ed. Hanlan in giving exhibitions in the South.

SEAWANHAKA YACHT CLUB RACES.—A report of the races in type is unavoidably crowded out until our next issue. In the deciding race Oct. 28 the Gracie won in the first class and the Oriva in the second class.

BASEBALL.

THE NORTHWESTERN LEAGUE.—An item on another page states that this League was organized on Oct. 27. The delegates present at the Palmer House, Chicago, on that date were: Peoria, Charles Flynn and E. M. Liebenstein; Bay City, E. T. Bennett and T. E. Webster; Springfield, J. E. Seery; East Saginaw, Daniel O'Leary; Grand Rapids, Elias Matter, George R. Perry and M. H. Ford; Toledo, M. J. Enright; Fort Wayne, Max Nirdlinger; Quincy, Charles Overrocker. The officers elected are: President, Elias Mather; vice-president, V. H. Dumbeck; Board of Directors—V. H. Dumbeck, E. T. Bennett, J. E. Seery, John Rush Matter, W. T. Colburn, Max Nird inger, Charles Overrocker. The next meeting will take place in Fort Wayne on the first Wednesday after the second Tuesday in December.

ALL THE COLLEGE CLUBS of the College Baseball Association, except Yale, have signed a paper in effect refusing to play with any professional team in 1883. The alleged object in view is to prevent the college teams from visiting League-club cities to play matches, to the neglect of their college studies. Yale's objection to signing is that the only opportunity they have for baseball-team practice is with professional nines. To give practical effect to the rule the vote should be unanimous.

THE METROPOLITAN TEAM for their League season of 1883 includes three first class "batteries," viz., Ward and Ewing, Welsh and Mike Dorgan, and O'Neill and Clapp. The infielders will be Connor, Troy and Hankinson on the bases and Casskins at short stop. The outfield will include Gillespie, Dorgan and Welsh. When Ewing does not catch he will cover second base. It will be seen that but three of this year's players have been retained by the Metropolitan company for their League championship team.

MANAGER BARNIE of the new Baltimore Club has engaged Daly—the one-armed pitcher—and Kelly of Cleveland as one of his "batteries," with Corkle, Larkin and McCormick as basemen, Schenck as short-stop, and York, Eggler and Howes as outfielders.

THE NEW AMERICAN ASSOCIATION TEAM for New York in 1883 will include two "batteries," consisting of Keefe and Holbert and Lynch and Reipschlager. The field-support will be Esterbrook, Brady, Holbert, Nelson, Kennedy, Keefe and Roseman.

THE METROPOLITAN CLUB were obliged to vacate their room in the old Post-office Building on Oct. 30, and hereafter their office will be at the club-house on the Polo Grounds until the Spring of 1883.

BUSHONG of the Worcesters has signed with the Clevelands for 1883. He will make a fine catcher for McCormick. G. W. Bradley has also signed with the Clevelands.

THE PROVIDENCE TEAM disbanded at Fort Wayne on Oct. 24, on which date Nava and Denny left for California.

THE BOSTON CLUB disbanded on Oct. 28 after defeating an amateur team by 9 to 0.

THE PHILADELPHIA CLUB grounds are to be given up to football during the remainder of the season.

THE NICETOWN CLUB defeated the Hillsdales at Nicetown, Pa., Oct. 28 by 5 to 0.

POWERS AND MOUNTAIN will be the pitcher and catcher of the new Columbus Club American team in 1883.

DAN O'LEARY has been engaged as the manager of the East Saginaw Club of the new Northwestern League.

THE ROSE HILL nine of St. John's College, Fordham, defeated the Albion nine of Brooklyn on Oct. 29, on the college grounds by 5 to 3.

LETTERS for Hines of Atlantic City and H. B. Phillips of Columbia Baseball Club await those gentlemen at this office.

THE RING.

THE SULLIVAN COMBINATION.

There has been trouble in the camp of this organization, which some weeks ago started out "on the road" with a flourish of trumpets, and for a while did a fine business, but latterly seems not to have largely added to the fortunes of the management. At Indianapolis, Ind., the reputed manager, H. J. Sargent, was left in the lurch, and on Oct. 23 the trouble and discontent which had been brewing for some time—and at the bottom of which, as has oft times been the case, there appears to have been a woman—culminated in a split between Sullivan and Madden. The latter, it seems, finding that he and John were unable to get along together in the show business, offered to pay half the expenses of the party to New York, or quit and let "Sully" run the concern himself, to which latter proposition John agreed. Next morning Billy left by rail for the metropolis, accompanied by Miss Annie Hart, a serio-comic singer connected with the combination, to whom, we understand, Madden was married last week, the newly-wedded pair sailing for Liverpool on Oct. 26. Madden says he entertains no enmity towards Sullivan, with whom he parted on good terms personally.

DEAD.—Stewart Adams, a man once well known and deservedly popular among the sporting men and politicians in this city, and for a number of years boniface of a public resort on Centre street, near "The Hall," died recently. Some years ago financial troubles affected his reason to such an extent that he was placed in an asylum, where he died, and was interred in Potter's Field, from whence old friends who had just been made acquainted with his sad fate last week caused his remains to be removed to one of the cemeteries. Many who were friends of the open-hearted, genial Stewart Adams in the time of his prosperity will peruse this paragraph with sorrowful feelings.

LYNN vs. CAMPBELL.—In the soft-glove fight between these men at the Standard Theatre, South Pueblo, Col., Lynn was seconded by little Jerry Mahoney and Johnny Holland, while two men from the Steel works waited on Campbell. Jack McGrail was referee. In the first round Bryan knocked his man down with a cross on the jaw and in the next round he drew first blood by a left-hander on Lynn's mouth. Campbell was plainly the best fighter, and thereafter Lynn, acting on the advice of his seconds, pursued dropping tactics, courting a foul, on which he won the fight in the fifteenth round, Campbell pasting him with the right as he went down on all fours. Time, 37 minutes.

TOM ALLEN, the once able pugilist, but whom reports received from beyond the Atlantic during the past year represented to be a mere wreck of his former self, arrived in Boston, Mass., Oct. 27, and has since been stopping at Patsy Sheppard's in Hayward place. There was a time when Tom Allen could have had a good chance to defeat any pugilist before the public, but that time has manifestly gone by, and it now seems the essence of folly to talk of matching him against Sullivan.

BILLY EDWARDS, the urbane ex-champion light-weight, has for some time past been on duty at Ed Stokes' model wine room in the Hoffman House, this city. His duties are similar to those performed at Delmonico's uptown establishment by James Cusick, famous as the trainer, second, adviser and intimate friend of John C. Heenan, and are not at all calculated to shorten his days in the land, while keeping him well heeled financially.

JEM WARD, the painter pugilist and ex-champion of England, who will be eighty two years old should he live till Dec. 26 next, was recently stricken with paralysis, and is confined to his bed at No. 28, Licensed Victuallers' Asylum, Old Kent road, E. C., London. His married daughter (formerly Miss Eleanor Ward, pianist), his grandson, granddaughter and great granddaughter are all with him.

GEORGE ROOKE desires us to state that he is ready and anxious to meet Mike Cleary at the latter's approaching benefit upon the same terms as those offered the Philadelphian by Rooke, and he promises the patrons of boxing-sport a more satisfactory display than was afforded when he and Cleary met recently.

GEORGE SILER has been placed in charge of the original iron pier at Coney Island, and will remain within sound of the music of the sea-waves until the season of 1883 opens. No danger of him becoming a "sad sea-dog," however.

FRANK WHITE is announced to give an exhibition at Madison-square Garden (upper hall) on Monday evening, Nov. 13. He is advertised to wind up with his opponent in the interrupted glove-contest, George Fulljames of Canada.

BILL WARD, who has trained Joe Goss, Jerry Noon, Jack Rooke, Patsy Reardon, Bill Hayes, Jim Gallagher and others, has been in a bad state of health for some time, and an assault-at-arms for his benefit was to have been held at his hostelrie, the Goldsmith's Arms, London, Oct. 18.

THERE ARE LETTERS here for John L. Sullivan, Billy Madden, Johnny Aaron, Tom Allen (English pugilist) and Johnny Lydon.

PROF. JOHN LABOISSIERE, formerly of Montreal, Canada, has opened a boxing school at Watertown, N. Y., and at last accounts was imparting instruction in the art to a number of the young men of the town.

JIM CARNEY of Birmingham, Eng., offers through the London papers to box any man in the world at 12st. or 13st., for $500 or $1,000 a side.

CRICKET.

A MATCH IN NEWARK FOR CHARITY.

The Newark, N. J., Cricket Club is a thoroughly live institution. They play cricket purely for the sake of the game, and have just brilliantly finished the most successful season the reorganized club ever had. The closing match on their field took place on Friday, Oct. 27, and it proved to be a most noteworthy event in the annals of the game in Newark. The occasion was a match of one inning a side, arranged under the auspices of the club for the benefit of three of the charitable institutions of Newark, viz., the Home for the Friendless, the Newark Orphan Asylum, and the Woman's Christian Association. In doing this the Newark Club has shown an example which our metropolitan cricket clubs might emulate with advantage and credit to themselves. The liberality which characterized the affair, the courtesy shown the visiting players, and the executive ability manifested in all the arrangements were of an exceptional character, and greatly contributed to the success of the match, which was one of the best exhibitions of cricket all round the club has ever had on its grounds. The weather was auspicious, the wicket a good one, and the arrangement of the field for the gala occasion was such as to present a most attractive picture, the attendance being the most fashionable seen on any cricket-field in or around the metropolis this season. To the credit of the gentlemen of the Staten Island Cricket Club the visiting party from the island lent their valuable aid to the match with a cordial spirit, which evinced the true cricket feeling they possessed, and in return they met with the most courteous reception. In fact, this match has had one good result in the restoration of good feeling between the two clubs, which had previously been interfered with by an unavoidable failure to fulfill an engagement. The Staten Island contingent took the 9.45 A. M. train for Newark, and by noon the contesting elevens took their respective places on the field and the contest began, J. W. Smyth's eleven—ably captained by Satterthwaite—having won the toss, going in to the bat. Lane's score of 22, creditably made against good bowling and some sharp fielding, and Lambkin's brilliantly hit 47, which secured for him the prize-bat presented by J. W. Smyth, were the highest figures of the inning. In the bowling Wittles—a new man—took the lead, he taking 3 wickets for two runs, Brewster being next with 5 for 47. Good catches were made by Cressy—sub.—Poinier, White and Brewster. After lunch at the tent the contest was resumed, Orton's eleven—captained by the jolly Williams—going in with a score of 115 to offset, a rather uphill piece of work, with Lane and Walker as bowlers, and backed up by so strong a field. They failed, as the score shows, White's 44 being the only double-figures made on the side, and he took the bat donated by Orton. Lambkin led the bowling with 4 wickets for 19 runs, Walker getting 3 for 28, and Lane 2 for 21. Good catches were made by Boote, Inman, Kessler and Lambkin, the fielding being first-class. The stewards on the occasion were William Clark, Hon. T. B. Peddie, Hon. Andrew Albright, Hon. Geo. A. Halsey, Christopher Roberts and Mayor Henry Lang.

GIRARD vs. BELMONT.

The final contest for the Halifax Cup for 1882 ended Oct. 28 in Philadelphia, with the result of a well-earned victory for the Belmonts, who now will hold the cup until the close of the season of 1883. The match was commenced on Friday with Belmonts at the bat, who, before they were disposed of, had run up the handsome total of 192, to which J. A. Scott, Wood, Herbert, Woolman and Bampfield were the principal contributors, with 46, 41, 26, 12 and 11 respectively. In the first inning of the Girards they were disposed of for the small sum of 57, Fitzgerald's 19 and R. Hargrave's 12 being the only double-figures registered. Being 135 runs short of the score of the opposing side, Girard was compelled to "follow on," and, notwithstanding the efforts of Fitzgerald, H. Hargrave and Corvin, who played well for their respective scores, failed to avert the single inning's defeat. The score:

In the bowling R. Hargrave took 5 wickets for 35 runs, Jarvis 3 for 65, and H. Hargrave 1 for 27. On the Girard side, Wood took a total of 7 wickets for 50 runs, and Herbert 7 for 52, Woolman taking 3 for 9 and West 1 for 7. Fitzgerald's 34 in the second inning of the Girards was a noteworthy score, his total in the match being 53.

THE ST. PAUL SCHOOL of Concord, N. H., walked away with the Harvard eleven at cricket Oct. 28 at Concord, defeating them by a score of 107 to 31. Harvard made 8 in the first and 23 in the second inning, and the School made 40 in the first and 67 in the second. Harvard defeated the Lawrence Cricket Club at Lawrence, Mass., 25, by nine wickets.

LACROSSE.

THE OELRICHS CUP TOURNAMENT.

Nothing has done so much to create an interest in lacrosse in the colleges at Harvard, Yale and Princeton as the annual competition for the prize cup presented by Herman Oelrichs, the president of the National Lacrosse Association of the United States; and now that Yale has entered the lists with Harvard and Princeton, we may look forward to a series of annual lacrosse matches between the University twelves of these institutions which may eventually rival the baseball and football championship contests of the College arena. On the occasion of the first tourney for the Oelrichs cup, in 1881, the contesting teams included but one college twelve—Princeton—the other teams being the New York Club, the Staten Island, and the tyros of Staten Island, the New York twelve winning an easy victory. The tourney of 1882 took place at the Polo Grounds on Oct. 28, and six clubs entered the lists, four of them being College twelves, including teams from Harvard, Yale and Princeton. The weather was favorable, and Jack Goulding had the field in fair condition, considering that it rained heavily the night before. The attendance was numerous and fashionable, the grand-stand being occupied by a number of ladies. Besides the College twelves of Harvard, Yale, Princeton and the New York University, there were those of the New York Lacrosse Club and of the Bloomfield Club, the latter giving the elder clubs quite a surprise party.

The programme opened with the match between the teams of Harvard and Yale, the former appearing in uniforms of crimson and black, and the latter in dark-blue. It was the debut of the Yale team in a match at the Polo Grounds, and they acquitted themselves with credit. The Harvards entered the field fresh from a victory over the Union Club of Boston, and they expected to have but little difficulty in scoring three straight games with the unpracticed team from Yale; but to their surprise they met with quite a stubborn resistance, and had to contest themselves with winning under the time-limit rule of most goals within an hour's play, inasmuch as neither side could succeed in scoring the best three goals in five. The Harvards began well by scoring the first goal in four minutes, through a sharp throw-in by Noyes; but it was not until they had a tough encounter for thirteen minutes that the second goal was scored, and this was taken by the good play of Woods. After that the two teams fought on for over half an hour, both sides defending their goals well. In other respects neither were up in team-work, and the "catching" and "passing" was poor on both sides, as was the throwing. The two teams were aided by the field-captainey of Mr. Sturgis for Harvard and Mr. Journeay for Yale, Mr. Farwell acting as umpire for Yale and Mr. Richards for Harvard. The two teams were as follow: Harvard—Easton, Davis, Rueter, Noble (captain), Goodale, Coit, Williams, Ennis, Nichols, Marquand, Noyes and Wood. Yale—Connell, Cottle, McCormick, Barbour, Mallon, McHenry, Strong, Ayres, Bowen, Spencer, Lincoln and McDowell (captain). Mr. Flannery acted as referee in the first match, and Mr. Atkinson of Columbia in the four succeeding contests.

The second match brought together the twelves of the New York University—uniformed in white and lilac colors—and the Bloomfield Lacrosse Club, the latter being neatly attired in yellow and black. The New York University twelve showed up in very good form, they surpassing their play in any previous match. Their catching was good, while their pick-ups of the ball and passing were first-class. The first goal in the match was taken by Captain Langstroph, after an eight minutes' struggle. This woke up the New Yorkers, and Captain Kingsley made a dash for the Bloomfield goal, and sent the ball through it in three minutes from the "facing." The next goal was not scored until the teams had fought for fifteen minutes, and then Langstroph again found a passage through the New York goal. Once more Kingsley offset this with another three minutes' dash. After a seven minutes' struggle Nichols sent the ball through the Bloomfield goal, and scored a victory for the University. The teams were as follow: N. Y. University—Cassidy, Townsend, Pearce, Dunning, Carpenter, Roberts, W. Skerry, Lullam, Gerndt, Kingsley (captain), Nichols and A. Skerry. Bloomfield—Bourne, Dairymple, Oakes, Davis, Van Auken, Tower, Spaulding, Darwin, Apgar, Capen, Reford and Langstroph Jr. (captain). Umpires, Messrs. Paton and Bayles.

The third match introduced the Princeton team as the opponents of the New York Club team. The Princetons being short, each side played ten men, but afterwards both had their full team. The first goal was won by Marson for New York after a five minutes' struggle, and the second by Ritchie, aided by Marson, for the same side, after nearly twenty minutes' play. The stout defense made by the Princetons now obliged the New Yorkers to fall back on the time-limit score, which gave them the match by two goals to none. The teams were: New York—Wheeler, Shaw, Journeay, Magee, Squibb, Pryor, Flannery, Manson, Merritt (captain), A. Ritchie, McEachron and Balch. Princeton—Egbert, Hodge (captain), Hewitt, Hall, Blakemore, Traverse, Rudd, Wilson, Edwards, Poe, Spence and "Brown." Umpires—Messrs. Marquand and Dusenberry.

This left the New York, Harvard and N. Y. University teams as the contestants in the last round, and, as Harvard drew a bye and secured a rest, the New York team had to play the University twelve in the fourth match of the tourney. Before this game was started there was an interval for throwing the lacrosse ball, which wasted so much time that the tourney could not be concluded that day. The entries for the trials in throwing were Dairymple and Bourne, Bloomfield Club; Noyes and Easton, Harvard; Bowen and Lincoln, Yale; Pearce and Gerndt, University; and Merritt and Balch, New York. The first throw to count was that of Bourne, who reached 99yds. one foot. Bowen of Yale went ahead of this and scored 111yds., Gerndt's throw being within two inches of the same distance. Balch, however, settled the question by throwing 126yds. 6in., being the best recorded throw in the United States. The best recorded throws in Canada are: F. Lally, 130yds., and R. McKenzie, 131yds. 6in. The throwing done with, the New York and University twelves entered the lists in the closing game, and although the latter played a fairly strong game, the New York team took three goals from them, the first being scored by Pryor in eleven minutes, the second by Ritchie in eighteen minutes, and the third by Pryor in three minutes. Messrs. Nichols and Paton acted as umpires. It was now nearly five o'clock, and it became evident that the next games would have to be played quickly. The "facing" was made at 4.50 P. M., and in less than three minutes Woods had found an opening to the New York goal. It was a quarter of an hour before the next goal was scored, and this time Flannery managed to score the first goal for New York. The contest was then continued until it was impossible to see the ball, when the referee called the game and announced the match as drawn. It was afterwards agreed to play the game off on the Harvard grounds on Election day.

THE TURF.

DEATH OF WM. H. BORST.

This gentleman, who for a number of years past has occupied quite a prominent position in sporting circles, where he was widely known and popular, breathed his last at his residence in this city early on the morning of Oct. 31. His death was caused by cancer, from which he had suffered long, and for the removal of which he had submitted to several painful operations. The nature of his ailment was known to comparatively few, and the announcement of his demise was a sorrowful surprise to many among even his intimate friends. Deceased first came into public notice a score or so of years ago as a driver of trotting horses, and for some time he figured conspicuously in that branch of the turf, among the well-known horses over which he held the ribbons on different tracks in the East being Jim Irving, George Wilkes, Fearless, John J. Bradley, Rapid, Josephine, Ed. Ellis and John Nesbitt, while in team-races he was repeatedly successful with Honest Allen and mate. He was never, however, a regular professional driver, but rather followed the sport for the love of it, and because he felt a pardonable pride in his unquestioned skill. Although he had not for many years past been a participant in track-races, his face and turn-out were familiar to frequenters of "the road" up to the time when illness prevented further indulgence in his favorite recreation. For some time Borst, in conjunction with ex-Assemblyman James Irving, managed the Empire Garden, on Sixth avenue, near Thirtieth street, and after withdrawing therefrom he opened a wine-room and restaurant on the southwest corner of Murray and Church streets. His latest venture was the Alhambra Theatre, West Twenty-seventh street, which, with Ed. Mallanan as partner, he re-opened in the Spring of the present year as a variety and sporting place of amusement, and to which he continued to give his attention until loss of health incapacitated him for work. Out of respect for his memory, the establishment was closed to the public. There are many who will recognize in the sudden taking-off of "Billy" Borst the loss of a true, unselfish friend, whose absence will be felt. Funeral services will be held at St. George's Church, Stuyvesant square (Sixteenth street), on Thursday, Nov. 2, at 1.30 P. M.

THE COUNTRY CLUB.

The inaugural meeting of this newly-organized Boston club, an offspring of the defunct Myopia Club, and formed for a similar purpose, was held Oct. 24, 26 at Mystic Park, the weather being wretched on the opening day, but excellent on the second. Results: Purse $150, for half-breeds, half a mile—J. P. Davis' Charlie first, in 53¾s.; Beverly second, Commodore third, and J. Epsom fourth. Sweepstakes, $20 each, $275 added, a mile and a furlong—Clyde Stable's Ventriloquist first, in 2.04½; Charlemagne second, and Touchstone third. Purse $175, one mile—Clyde Stable's Torchlight first, in 1:23, Glenlivat second, and Dr. Graves third. Maiden steeplechase, $350, two miles and a half—Commodore first, in 6:04; Dilemma second, Myopia steeplechase, $450—Clyde Stable's Black Crook first, in 5.53; Rose second, and Echo third

OUR DEAD FRIEND.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Earth once more bares her warm old breast
To pillow one more wearied head:
And while he takes his solemn rest
We grieve and sigh: "Our friend is dead."

They mourn who never knew his face!
They know how well for human needs,
They know with what untiring grace,
He wrought the crown of kindly deeds!

His was the cheery, manful creed
To make the sad old world more sweet;
And his the honor and the meed
Whose life is done, his work complete.

His work is finished; deep, calm rest
Is his, and ours the grief and loss;
We grieve with her who loved him best,
Who, widowed, weeps beneath her cross.

The hearts we lose, the dear and true,
No coming time to us regives;
And they, the loyal, are the few,
So holier grief's prerogatives.

Our friend is gone, and his the crown
That honor wears. In Earth's warm breast
We reverently lay him down,
And leave him to his God, and rest.

PART THE FIRST.---THE GIPSY'S BRIDE.

CHAPTER I.—A GARRET IN THE RUE ST. HONORE.

August 30, 1715, was the eve of the most important event in the Eighteenth Century. The Sun-king lay at the point of extinguishment. Louis the Grand was disappearing from a world upon which, for so long a period, he had shed rays of imperishable glory.

Upon that day the Marquise of Maintenon, accompanied by Pere Le Tellier, ascended into her carriage and drove to Saint-Cyr. Both, at the final hour, abandoned the King, who was making vain endeavors to bring them back.

The monarch's agony commenced upon the 31st, and was embittered by displays of most stupendous ingratitude. The great monarch upon his death-bed experienced the indifference of his sons, of his daughters, of his relatives. Worse than all were his desertion by his favorite, and the changeableness of his courtiers. Merely a few domestics wept around the couch whereon the Colossus of his century was drawing his last sigh. On Sunday, September 1, at eleven minutes past eight, was heard a long-drawn moan. Louis XIV was dead!

At nine o'clock the Duke of Orleans' spacious saloons were too circumscribed to contain the crowd of courtiers thronging around a freshborn demigod. While preparations for the great King's funeral were being made, intelligence of the great event spread like wildfire throughout Paris.

The populace danced and sang upon the public squares. Monsieur d'Argenson, after vainly endeavoring to suppress this impious demonstration, declared his impotence to prevent a terrible disturbance were the funeral procession to traverse Paris. Consequently, upon the evening of Sept. 9 the mournful cortege silently departed from Versailles, crossed the Bois de Boulogne, and through byways gained the plain of St. Denis. The funeral-car of a Prince sycophantically adulated during his lifetime was absolutely unaccompanied by courtiers. Incredible! Among the mourners were but six persons of rank, compelled to attend in their official positions. From the Princes of the royal blood the Duke of Orleans was the sole representative present.

Despite the precautious taken to avoid shameless insults to the King's mortal remains, an infuriated crowd filled the plain of St. Denis. The air resounded with scandalous rejoicings and outbursts of sacrilegious joy. Blinded fanatics, excited to rage through memory of persecutions created by the Bull Unigenitus, cried out to wrest the links from the funeral torch-bearers, in order, with their flames, to fire the Jesuits' houses.

In the midst of the crowd arose voices chaunting a quatrain making allusion to deposit of the King's heart in the professed home of their order, where could be found that of his father.

Finally, upon Sept. 12, Parliament, after a brief session, annuled Louis XIV's will, and declared the Duke of Orleans to be Regent of France to administer affairs during the King's minority.

Philip d'Orleans plays an important part in the narrrtive we are about to commence.

Some weeks after these grave events—that is to say, during the early portion of October, about the hour that all Paris was asleep, save gamesters, lovers and thieves, belated pedestrians treading the muddy pavement of the Rue St. Honore, raising their eyes heavenward, might have perceived a singular light behind the small panes of a window in the garret of a tall house of suspicious appearance. At times this light diffused merely a pale clearness, scarcely perceptible, seemingly about to extinguish, after which it would suddenly increase, become red, effulgent, almost dazzling, assuming the proportions of a conflagration, to disappear and revive after intervals more or less protracted. This phenomenon might with plausibility be attributed to the action of a forge-bellows momentarily idle and then set in motion by a vigorous hand. Still a forge and its accessories in a garret amid the most populous section of Paris were unlikely. Beside this window stood another, thrown wide open. Within its dark frame and against the darkness of the interior chamber could be vaguely discerned a human form, erect and motionless.

Let us penetrate within the house, with its two garrets: let us ascend a fetid staircase, having for its banister but a sticky rope. Let us stop at the uppermost story, where the staircase terminates and two worm-eaten doors confront each other. One of these doors is open, allowing us to cross the threshold of a low, narrow room, half-wrested from the roof and badly lighted by a copper lamp placed upon a pitch-pine table rudely wrought.

Some wooden stools and two beds, or rather two pallets, comprised the room's entire furniture. Upon one of these beds slept, with a feverish and agitated slumber, a woman of between forty and forty-five years in age, yet much older in appearance by reason of her long locks of gray hair flowing over a copper-colored countenance. Her thin body was convulsed with nervous tremblings, while her lips muttered unintelligible words. This woman was named Gillonne. The erect human form near the open window was that of a girl, with her eyes fixed upon the starry canopy of heaven. This girl, almost a child, as she appeared not to have reached sixteen, was absorbed for some minutes in mute and profound contemplation of the innumerable stars, whose rays seemed to fascinate her. Then she abruptly abandoned the window serving as a species of observatory, and, regaining the interior of the apartment without closing the blinds, directed her steps towards the little table upon which stood the metallic lamp.

Beside this lamp could be noticed an open volume, large in size, with red edges, solidly bound in brown sheepskin, the corners garnished with verdigris-tainted copper. This volume contained a treatise upon astrology. The girl seated herself, upraised the wick of her lamp to supply a more vivid light, placed the book upon her knees, and, with the same abstraction displayed in contemplation of the radiant stars, she devoted herself to a study of this mysterious and venerable parchment-tome.

The singular creature who at an advanced hour of the night indulged in this eccentric, at least, occupation, was one of those shining marvels in production of which nature at times delights, doubtless with the intent of giving an incontestable denial to sceptics, whose incredulity affirms lack of perfection in this mundane sphere.

Of medium height, but admirably proportioned, the youthful adept in occult science offered a type of Orientalism in all which was most rare and accomplished. Large, very deep-blue eyes of an unmatched brilliancy illuminated a countenance sublime in its warm paleness, like unto that of Balkis, the blooming Queen of Sheba, coming to outpour her love and treasure at the feet of King Solomon. A silken flow of hair of a velvet blackness was twisted thrice in thick coils around her patrician-like head, disclosing to sight but the lower extremities of ears, pearly in lustre. Tapering hands, veritable hands of the real lady, with thin fingers and roseate nails, terminated arms a trifle pitted, but of irreproachable purity in form.

We will have completed this portrait, or rapid sketch of this divine creature, who was named Hilda, when we have said that all in her was as perfect as her face. Her slightest movement was a revelation of ease and grace. She charmed irresistibly with a first glance, although there was a something almost fearful in the lustrous brilliancy of her pupils, gleaming beneath long, curved lashes, and an indescribable expression in her smile when her blood-red lips half opened to disclose teeth of ivory whiteness.

The marvelous female, leaning her beautiful head upon he hand, read and reread the two pages she had left for one instant to contemplate the stars. In this wise rolled by some half an hour, and nothing disturbed the garret's deep silence, when the woman, abed and asleep, suddenly writhed upon her pallet as if beneath the influence of a nightmare, while venting inarticulate moans. Finally she awoke, panting, roused herself upon her elbow in affright, and muttered in a tone guttural and deeply affected:

"Hilda, you are there, are you not? Is it you that I see, my child?"

The girl partially raised her head, and said in the calmest of tones:

"Yes, it is I, mother."

"What time is it?"

"Two o'clock in the monring by the Palais Royal clock."

"What are you doing so late, and why not abed long since?"

"I am reading—I study."

"Always the same book?"

"Always."

The woman imperceptibly shrugged her shoulders and resumed:

"Has anything extraordinary occurred since I have been asleep?"

"Positively nothing. What would you have occur here? Why ask that question, mother?"

"Because I have had a bad dream, a fearful dream, a horrible dream, filling my soul with such trouble and terror that it seems to me as if I were actually present at the scenes occurring in that dream."

The girl quitted her stool, placed her book upon the table, and approached the bed.

"Ah!" said she, "you have been dreaming? About what?"

"Your foster-sister, Diana de Saint Gildas, was in this garret ——"

"Well! but there don't seem to be anything frightful about that," muttered Hilda with a smile.

"Wait and you will see. Diana said she was threatened by a grave peril; she added that you alone could save her, and that she would confide in you."

"And doubtless I endeavored to protect her; still, despite all I could do in her defense, this danger smote her? That is what has so greatly excited you."

"No, it is not that, but much worse! You replied to Diana by protestations of kindness. She threw herself into your arms. I saw you interchange kisses as two sisters separated for a long time and again reunited, and then Diana suddenly became pale—pale as a corpse—and, staggering within your embrace, you stifled her while kissing her."

"I stifled her without the wish to do it!" exclaimed the girl.

"At first so I thought, but now I am disabused. Diana muttered: 'Hilda, you are slaying me!' and she struggled feebly. You, without answering, continued to smile upon her while tightening your embrace. She implored in a voice of supplication, gradually ceasing in distinctness. Groans subsided into a ratile, and even that rattle died away. Diana was dead! You opened your arms. She fell with a sinister sound upon the spot where you now are. There was blood upon her lips, and her rigid eyes were devoid of sight. Then, continuously smiling, you trampled upon the corpse."

A momentary silence succeeded these last words, to which Hilda could not listen without an involuntary shudder.

"In truth, it is horrible," said she finally; "but fortunately it is senseless. Mother, your dream is devoid of reason! You are well aware that, after you, Diana is the person I most love in the world! You well know that my greatest sorrow, I can almost say my only sorrow, originates in our separation."

"I know all that, but I likewise know that dreams are warnings, and their prognostications, however unlikely or impossible they may appear, will sooner or later be realized. You doubt that no more than I do; you, especially inquisitive in exploration of the unknown arcanum—you, whom I have so often seen interrogating people of our race, imploring them to initiate you into the mysteries of dream-interpretation."

Hilda shook her head while listening to her mother. She was upon point of answering. She had not time. A terrible explosion suddenly resounded, like unto the noise of a thunderclap, in the adjacent garret, the one through whose window we had seen flash the intermittent light. The upper story of the house trembled as if shaken by an earthquake. Deep crevices showed themselves in the partition-wall, against which rested the pallets of mother and of daughter. Through these fissures poured torrents of smoke, black and offensive, accompanied by that noxious and stifling odor peculiar to certain explosive gases. Simultaneously a cry was heard, a cry of terror and of agony, while the heavy sound of a body falling upon the tiled floor almost instantly succeeded. Wild with fright, the aged Gillonne leaped from her bed, and by a wholly instinctive movement seized Hilda within her arms and pressed her to her breast, while stammering in a smothered tone:

"Mercy! we are lost! The roof is falling upon us! Let us fly, if there still be time!"

And, without perceiving that she was scantily clad, she attempted to drag the girl through the doorway.

CHAPTER II.—THE WOUNDED MAN.

Hilda appeared to have preserved her self-possession. Undeniably gifted with great strength of character, she participated but in a slight degree in her mother's instinctive terror. She gently disengaged herself from the maternal clasp and replied, while pointing to the garret's ceiling:

"Fly? And of what use?"

"To save our lives."

"You plainly perceive, mother, that the danger no longer exists, or at least not for the immediate moment, since the rafters have not bulged. The roof remains firm, and I warrant will not soon cave in. We will do better by giving our attention and care to the unfortunate man assuredly needing our assistance, were he to be, as I much doubt, still living."

The mother gazed upon her child in astonishment.

"Of what unfortunate man are you speaking?" she murmured.

"Can you not imagine?"

"No."

"I allude to our neighbor. That pale young man, clad in black, seemingly as poor as ourselves, whom we have met from time to time on the staircase, when he never fails to crouch against the wall to allow us passage, saluting us with genteel politeness, as if we were grand ladies."

"I know to whom you allude. But why imagine he has need of our assistance?"

"His garret is contiguous to ours."

"Well! what then?"

"In that garret the explosion occurred causing us just now so much fright."

"Are you sure of it?"

"Certain. And you can be as convinced as I am. Look!" exclaimed the girl, pointing her finger towards the partition, whose gaping cleft suffered further escape of clouds of smoke and of puffs of deleterious vapors. "Throw a garment over your shoulders and come with me."

Within the room, modest and, we might safely say, miserable, over whose threshold we have crossed, the girl exerted a species of domination to which her mother scrupulously obeyed. Consequently the aged Gillonne—we will thus designate her, although her age was merely in appearance—rapidly wrapped herself in a mantle of coarse stuff, took the lamp and followed Hilda, who had darted out into the corridor.

It was a matter of ease to penetrate the adjacent garret, for the door had been wrenched from its hinges and blown to the outside, half shivered in twain by the explosion, of whose origin we are in ignorance.

"Hilda, my child, do not enter there, I beseech you!" cried out Gillonne, afresh terrified by the dark and noxious smoke, charged with sulphuric odors, escaping through the yawning aperture.

Paying no heed to this maternal recommendation, the young girl resolutely forced her way amid the garret's darkness, while the old woman, unwilling to abandon her, followed, trembling in all her limbs.

The copper lamp threatened to go out amid this repulsive atmosphere. Its faint light, however, permitted the two females to distinguish amid the rubbish of the wreck a brick furnace almost intact, a large pair of bellows, metal pots and earthen crucibles, and five or six volumes quite similar to the one on whose study Hilda had been absorbed some time previously. The explosion had torn into fragments a couple of those tomes, whose leaves, tattered and rumpled as by a malicious hand, were strewn upon the ground.

Amid these ruins lay stretched upon its back the body, or corpse, of the garret's tenant. It was that of a young man about twenty-five years of age, tall and slender, with a very handsome countenance, despite his closed eyes and livid paleness. A wound from glass, undoubtedly inflicted by a fragment of a retort, was perceptible upon his forehead, whence the blood oozed in dripping drops, rendering his paleness the more repulsive. Hilda turned towards her mother, and in an agitated voice inquired:

"Does he still live?"

The elder woman reached over the body, placed one of her withered hands upon the heart, and upon arising said:

"He lives, and I even think him not to be seriously harmed."

"His blood runs, however."

"That is nothing—a simple contusion, which applications of salt water will cure in a few hours."

"And do you attribute his swoon to this contusion?"

"Not at all."

"And to what, then? Answer, mother."

"This young man was making upon that furnace some sort of an infernal cookery. The pot containing the drugs has blown up, threatening to demolish the house and felling to the floor the imprudent author of his own misfortune, who, in my opinion, has only to cry quits."

"Well, then, mother," replied the girl, "whether his condition be serious or not, we cannot leave the unfortunate man."

"What do you want us to do?"

"Carry him into our room."

"Our room! heavens!" exclaimed Gillonne. "Hilda, are you crazy? Have we place in our room for an unfortunate stranger, a young man?"

"It is merely offering hospitality for the remainder of the night to a wounded fellow-being, whose ills will not fail to augment from lack of care. It does not require much space for that. We will lay him upon my bed until he recovers consciousness."

"But ——"

Hilda foresaw the discussion which would arise. She cut it off in time.

"And I, mother," she said.

At the same time she took the young man by the shoulders, and, gifted with a nervous strength not to be suspected from her graceful exterior, raised him up without difficulty. The old woman came to her assistance, grumbling in a low tone all the while, and in a few minutes the inhabitant of the garret was stretched, still unconscious, on the pallet serving as the girl's sleeping-couch.

Meanwhile the lower part of the house resounded with buzzings almost similar to those of a beehive when the inmates are at work. Abruptly aroused from their slumbers by the detonation, the thoroughly frightened tenants had hurriedly arisen from their beds. Keys were to be heard grating in locks, doors opened and shut, and timorous voices of both sexes and of all ages interchanged questions that could not be answered. Finally, having conceived an idea as to the disturbance having originated beneath the eaves of the house, a half-score of inquisitive searchers, armed with lamps and candles, set about ascending the staircase. When they arrived at the head of the stairway, on the very scene of the disaster clearly designated by the smoke, sulphuric fumes and heaps of fragments, rendering the devastated garret a perfect chaos, they discovered no one. The door of the adjoining garret had been closed behind the two females after carrying in the young man's body. Scarce disencumbered of her burden, Gillonne upraised her hands and arms heavenward, as if in evidence of her silent protest, mentally uttered with a full heart, against her daughter's whim.

Hilda, without paying a particle of serious attention to this mute demonstration, or perchance even remarking it, set about her charitable design. She began washing the wound. Then she soaked in water strongly infused with salt a cloth bandage, and compressed it tightly upon his forehead. Scarce had this application touched the gaping edges of the wound than the sharp pain caused from contact of the salt with the injured flesh galvanized, as it were, the stranger, and caused him almost immediately to resume consciousness. His eyes opened—large black, penetrating eyes—and by an abrupt movement he raised himself up. Not recognizing his garret, he asked in a feeble voice:

"Where am I?"

"With your neighbors, sir," responded Hilda, "in the room adjoining your own."

"How came I here, mademoiselle, and what has happened?"

"What has happened to you, sir," replied the girl, "neither mother nor I know but imperfectly—or rather we can only imagine—and, perchance, may be deceived. How came you here? It is most simple. I will tell you, and your remembrance may rectify or complete my account."

CHAPTER III.—CONFIDENCES.

In few words Hilda related that which we have described at greater length. Upon the termination of her brief narrative the young man exclaimed:

"You have imagined perfectly correctly. You undoubtedly regard me as a lunatic; still, I must admit that I am engaged in alchemy. I seek the philosopher's stone—the secret of making gold. This night I had every reason to believe my work would have been crowned with success. A few minutes more and I would have cried out: 'Eureka!—I have found it!' But my imprudence would not allow it. In the transport of joy possessing me in perceiving my final essay decisive, I neglected the most ordinary elementary precaution. I did not take into account the excessive expansion of the gases in a retort placed over my furnace. Now everything must be recommenced, and the result, upon which I most correctly calculated, will it persist in evading me as it has done for so long a time? Finally, whatever it may be, I will not relinquish it, but will resume courageously my struggle with the unknown. It only remains to me at present to thank you from the bottom of my heart for what you have done and to rid you of my presence."

While thus speaking the young man quitted the bed upon which he had been sitting, and sought to make for the door; but his strength was unequal to his will. He fell back.

"Sang Dieu!" he exclaimed with an angry gesture, "what does this say? One would imagine my fainting again! Am I such a woman?"

"Sir," said Hilda with animation, "it is not surprising that you still feel very feeble. Resign yourself to passing the remainder of the night here. Furthermore, where do you want to go?"

"To my own room, it strikes me. Permit me to lean upon your arm, and, despite a remnant of weakness, for which I blush, but which it is impossible for me to subdue, I will traverse that slight space without difficulty."

A smile dwelt upon Hilda's lips.

"Heavens, sir!" she murmured, "it appears that I just now imperfectly explained. I should then have revealed bad news. You cannot return to your room."

"And why, mademoiselle?"

"Because in your chamber all is demolished, and nothing remains fit for use. One would think that the fire of heaven had been there, leaving but shapeless wrecks of unrecognized objects. You will find in your room neither a bed to lie upon nor even a chair for rest."

"Hence," stammered the unknown, "my chemical instruments ——"

"Are reduced to dust."

"My books?"

"Annihilated, save a couple of volumes miraculously escaping disaster."

The young man gave signs of profound discouragement. His head leaned over upon his breast, and he muttered:

"All gone! How now to recommence work?"

The stranger was, as we have stated, a young man of dark complexion, pale and slender, of about twenty-five years in age. His countenance presented features of perfect regularity and irreproachable distinction; but his black eyes, deep set beneath arched lashes and encircled by a bluish tinge, his aquiline nose and lips, well marked, although a trifle thin, and especially too faintly colored, bestowed something of a sinister aspect upon his beauty. His costume, thrown in disorder by his fall, of a uniform dark color, as that of a small tradesman, exhibited nothing of the common class. The fashion of the coarse material revealed the gentleman.

"My head reels and my heart sinks," stammered he after a slight pause, "and I am in dread of again losing consciousness, which would be both absurd and inexcusable. May I pray, mademoiselle, the favor of a few drops of fresh water?"

Scarcely had he pronounced these words than Hilda seized a pewter goblet and filled it to the brim. She presented it to the wounded man, who drained it, while his countenance expressed immediate relief.

"Ah!" said he, "this does more good than tongue can tell. Behold me entirely recovered."

"Have a care, sir," interposed the girl; "a little while ago you thought yourself very strong; hence no more imprudence!"

"Oh! rest easy, mademoiselle," rejoined the stranger with a smile. "I feel myself under too deep obligations not implicitly to obey. But may I at least be permitted to make known the person to whom you have extended hospitality?"

"I fear that talking will fatigue you."

"Not at all, and the circumstances under which we have been brought together should brand me in your eyes as somewhat of an adventurer, if not anything worse. It is my duty to enlighten you as speedily as possible. I belong, neither more nor less, to the category of vagabonds. I am named the Chevalier Gerard de Noyal."

"Gerard de Noyal!" exclaimed the girl in some astonishment; "that is a beautiful name. You are noble?"

"As much as man can be, as I belong to one of the oldest families in Poitou. My ancestors were among the Crusaders."

"But then you are rich?"

"That, for instance, is a horse of another color! I am as poor as a church-rat! Job upon his dunghill of biblical memory was a millionaire alongside of me. Does that surprise you?"

"Greatly, I admit. How comes it that you are a gentleman and possess no money?"

"Nothing can be simpler, as you will see. I have two brothers, the Count and the Vicomte de Noyal. The Count, in his capacity as the eldest born, has possession of all the estates and manors of the family. A fief was reserved for the Vicomte, who, moreover, thanks to his title, married rich. To me remained but a slim pittance. My loving brothers decided upon putting me into holy orders ——"

"Wanted to make you a priest!" exclaimed the girl.

"Exactly so."

"And you refused?"

"Enthusiastically more than fifty times, if once. The vocation was ruin to me. The distant prospect of a bishop's mitre or even of a cardinal's hat tempted me in no great measure. This unexpected refusal annoyed my brothers, who had reckoned upon my submission, and attempted to enforce obedience. A quarrel resulted in my complete revolt. I was told that they would have nothing in common with a rebellious younger son, despising to make his way in the Church to ecclesiastical dignities. I departed without regret, and left the chateau of Noyal never again to set foot therein, and came to Paris with my heritage of about fifty thousand livres.'

"Fifty thousand livres!" muttered the girl. "That is a large sum!"

"For a poor devil without ambition, without passions, without inclinations, perchance, indeed, it may be a large sum, but for me I assure you it was next to nothing."

"You then need, to be happy, a deal of money?"

"An immense deal! You perceive I speak with entire frankness. Not that I am avaricious. Ah! life is short! To heap up wealth to me appears the height of folly and of mortal weakness. I love gold, not for its own sake, but for the pleasure it will procure, and I covet pleasure to a boundless extent. To heard! fie now! To spend without counting to make gold flow incessantly with an open hand, there is my dream, and that dream I want to realize or to die. Perhaps, mademoiselle, you cannot thoroughly understand all this?"

"Yes, yes, but I do understand," replied Hilda in an excited tone of voice, breathing a frenzied animation.

Gerard continued:

"With such an idea, with an insatiate love for luxury in its various forms, one cannot go far with merely the trifle of fifty thousand livres in his wallet. And in this respect I labored under no delusion. Another in my place would have gayly dissipated his handful of coin within a few months. I resolved upon making it the stake for the game I was to play, and, did I emerge conqueror, to place in my hands one of those unheard-of, fabulous, illimitable fortunes rendering a man monarch of this world."

Gerard paused and changed his tone of voice.

"But I talk, talk," he said, "without dreaming that all these things should afflict you with mortal weariment."

"You are mistaken, sir," replied Hilda with animation. "On the contrary, they interest me a thousand-fold more than you imagine. So continue, I pray of you."

The Chevalier resumed:

"In consequence of the enthusiastic and eccentric taste of a certain one of my great-uncles, who lived a very original and not very stable existence, the library at the chateau of Noyal, where was passed my infancy and earliest youth, was amply furnished with volumes treating upon the occult sciences, such as magic, divination, and the transmutation of metals."

"Ah!" murmured the girl.

"Still I may premise that you have, perchance, not heard of what we understand by the occult sciences, or possibly you may be in total ignorance of their objects."

"Therein you deceive yourself, for I am better instructed than you imagine."

"Since it is so, so much the better; the explanation I tender you will prove more to the purpose."

Hilda made an affirmative sign. Gerard continued:

"One day, being still young, about fifteen at the utmost, the Autumn rains confined me within doors for a week. I was wearied, which was a miracle, and I knew not to what saint or demon I was indebted for that lonesomeness. The library offered me a refuge, and chance induced me to poke my nose among my great uncle's dusty tomes.

"Strange reading for a child, was it not? I should, according to all probabilities, after glancing over the first page, leave the volume with a yawn, finding its contents obscure and thoroughly incomprehensible. I did nothing of the kind! I felt myself immediately carried by a superior power amid the obscurities, which grew more lucid proportionately as I advanced. I devoured the first volume, then I read the second, and still another, until, more and more captivated, days did not suffice for perusal of these hornbooks, to which I consecrated more than three-quarters of my nights. In few words, at the termination of two years of study these mysterious sciences, placing in hands of adepts a power almost divine, had no longer secrets for me. I abridge. You now comprehend the audacious part I dared to allude to a while since. When, after the rupture with my brothers, I found myself upon the pavements of Paris, alone and master of my own actions, with my inheritance in my pocket, I resolved upon utilizing my long studies to the profit of a coming future, to pass from theory to practice, to experiment, to toil and to employ unto my last coin all my money in resolving the work of the great problem of the transmutation of metals.

"On the morrow and thenceforth I set about work. Since that day four years have elapsed. Experience has been dearly bought. Experiments have been purchased at immense cost. During four years I have lived like a beggar, refusing myself almost the necessities of life to husband my slender resources. I progressed slowly, still firmly and surely sustained by hope amid privations. Success has not been doubtful. I have already made a discovery of wonderful importance. Unfortunately, proportionately as my confidence augmented my purse emptied. I left the modest, still convenient domicile I had hitherto occupied and came to inhabit this garret adjacent to your own. Of what account the present dwelling of one who soon will possess palaces compared to which Versailles is but a hovel? Yesterday I expended my last louis in a decisive test. I was nearing the end. To-night the hour of success was to dawn upon me. A few minutes more and I would have been of myself richer than all the Jews and kings in the universe. One trivial imprudence and all was lost, annihilated! I was shipwrecked in sight of port; and a most hopeless shipwreck it is, for to recommence my labors I need money, a deal of money, and I have none."

After pronunciation of these words in a measured tone of voice, the Chevalier, seized by a fit of discouragement, suffered his head to fall upon his breast in mournful silence.

Hilda at first desired to respect this silence, but suddenly she made an energetic gesture and exclaimed:

"Why say you, that all is lost?"

Gerard in astonishment raised his head.

"Need it be repeated?" he inquired. "Have you not understood? I am absolutely without resources. My work is of a character received with a smile, and when alluded to with mocking incredulity. Whoever devotes himself as I have done to a search after the philosopher's stone is treated as an idiot, a visionary and fool, and oftentimes as a knave designing to operate upon human stupidity. Alas! I am a delusionist; still there exists no person, you understand, in this wide world from whom I might beg the money necessary, or one who would loan it me."

"What amount is, then, necessary?" inquired the girl timidly.

"At least two thousand livres," replied the Chevalier.

"With two thousand livres are you certain to succeed?"

"As certain as my name is Gerard. And note well that in making this assertion I do not indulge in chimeras. I speak of fixed facts. Yes; I will succeed, for thus far I have ever succeeded. At the moment of the explosion the transmutation was being effected—the metals melted in the crucible were changing into gold."

"Well," quoth Hilda in a firmer tone, "reassure yourself, Chevalier, concerning those two thousand livres—you shall have them."

"Do you speak seriously, mademoiselle?" exclaimed Gerard, suddenly galvanized by this unexpected promise.

"Yes; I swear to you."

"And who will give them to me?"

"I will."

Upon hearing these words the old woman uttered a husky exclamation, accompanied by a gesture of anger and of fright.

"Are you crazed, unfortunate child?" she immediately inquired. "Do you forget that we are poor to such a degree that from day to day we stand in want of bread?"

"What matters it to you, mother, provided I obtain them? And I will obtain them as I have promised, and that promise I will keep."

"And I," said Gerard excitedly, "release you, mademoiselle, from that promise. I will not accept the money you have offered."

"Why?"

"Is it conduct worthy of a gentleman to sow discord between mother and daughter? Such conduct is none of mine."

"Have a heed, sir," replied Hilda with a smile. "I am tempted to believe that you regret your confidence and that you entertain misgivings as to sharing with me a small portion of the immense wealth which would flow into your hands from the two thousand livres offered by me and refused by you."

Gerard made an abrupt movement and desired to speak. The girl did not allow him time.

"Oh! I can imagine what you are going to say," she continued. "Such a sentiment cannot enter into a gentleman's soul—that I know as well as you. Divest yourself of all justification, for I have scarce thought of accusing you. I desired to restrain you from longer repelling the assistance which will come through me, and I think I have succeeded. Rest easy; moreover, you will be no subject for discord between mother and me, as you seem to suspect."

Then Hilda, without change in tone, added:

"You have need of rest. Sleep calmly. Upon awakening you will find, I assure you, my mother in perfect harmony with me."

TO BE CONTINUED.

"WHO inaugurated the Fall campaign?" inquired a teacher in a Cincinnati public school. "Adam!" quickly responded the sharp youngster.

FRANK QUEEN AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Orphaned at an early age, and thus thrown upon his individual resources in the face of most discouraging circumstances, under the pressure of which not more than one man in the thousand but would have succumbed and passed into positive oblivion, Mr. Queen was literarily the architect of his personal career and of his fortune, from corner-stone to capital. With a laudable desire to glean needed information as he journeyed through after-life, he inaugurated his working existence through the assumption of a lowly position in a printing-office, wherein he toiled assiduously until he mastered the mysteries of the typographic craft and became recognized as a competent compositor. Mr. Queen may be regarded as somewhat fortunate in seeking employment under the tutelage of Willis Gaylord Clark, a man of literary culture and at the time editor of a leading Philadelphia journal. Mr. Clark appears to have attached young Queen to his personal staff, treating him with marked consideration, while encouraging his ambitious aspirations. During the period of this employment Mr. Queen devoted a portion of his time to proofreading, and from that occupation he acquired an extraordinary facility in the deciphering of manuscript-writing, which subsequently proved of inestimable value to him during his editorial career, as few communications would be submitted to him which he could not peruse with alacrity and fidelity, thereby insuring careful critical scrutiny. Mr. Clark, actuated by disinterested friendship, as Mr. Queen frequently and gratefully averred when alluding to the incidents of his early youth, treated his youthful protege with kindly solicitude, promising him that, upon an intended visit to New York, he would take him as a companion, as a reward for his diligence and fidelity, so that he might view the wonders of the Atlantic metropolis. This promise produced a deep impression upon Frank, and exercised, as subsequent events demonstrated, an important influence upon his destiny, becoming, as it assuredly did, the day-dream of his earlier life, whose realization was procrastinated by his social guardian's unexpected demise, although Willis Clark had long been a consumptive, insensibly mouldering into a premature physical decay.

Deprived of his friend and adviser, and more than ever appreciating his lonely condition, Mr. Queen resolved upon a temporary abandonment of his manual trade in order to start a business upon his own account, which he trusted to render remunerative. From his earliest days he had exhibited a natural instinct for literature, and, as his means were too limited to indulge in the purchase of books at a time anterior to the production of cheap publications, he increased his store of knowledge by a constant perusal of all weekly newspapers falling in his way. It must be remembered that the hebdomadals of that date were virtually literary magazines, containing instructive articles and essays from the pens of distinguished men, as well as classic fictions generally reprinted from English publications. In fact, these newspapers constituted almost the only means whereby the general public could gather inklings of current and standard literature. To deal, as an article of trade, in wares to him a source of inestimable entertainment, most naturally suggested itself to Mr. Queen's mind as a congenial and decorous method of attaining a competent livelihood until the acquisition of financial capital adequate to the realization of a vague idea he had formed as to being, like his friend Clark, the editor of a paper. Consequently, he commenced the battle of mercantile life as a newsvender, near the Exchange in Philadelphia. The experiment, after a vigorous trial, proved unsatisfactory, newspapers in those days being delivered by carriers at the doors of patrons, paying their subscriptions annually at the publication-offices, the radical revolution wrought in the retail newspaper trade through the successful introduction of the penny press not having as yet reached the Quaker City. However, Frank early retired from this initial enterprise, and with just sufficient money left to put into effect his deceased mentor's unfinished project of having him view the marvels of Gotham.

A man of Queen's acute perception at once observed the immense difference displayed in the energy, activity and progressiveness of the newspaper world in New York from the slow and easy processes of the city of his birth. Popular dailies in the great metropolis were being sold for cash to subdealers over the counter and hawked by newsboys in the streets, while the old-fashioned system of publishing literary weeklies by subscription was fast falling into disuse. The penny press was in its infancy, and so was the news business; cheap publications were growing the order of the day, as circulating libraries were putting up their shutters; in fact, earnestness in competition had infused a life and activity in the retail news business, rendering it both reputable and profitable. The city was completely inundated with morning and evening newspapers, while the weeklies, particularly the recently-born Sunday press, were in unparalleled demand. At almost any hour of the day an "extra" from a daily newspaper office was liable to make its appearance upon the chance arrival of an Atlantic steamer or the occurrence of a domestic calamity. People purchased these ephemeral sheets eagerly, the demand ever exceeding the supply; hence the prospect was inviting, and Mr. Queen most wisely embraced it, as he comprehended the intricacies of a trade whose success depended wholly upon energy, attentiveness and industry.

By a fortunate chance, almost immediately upon his arrival in New York, Mr. Queen had stumbled into an acquaintance with George Adriance, a pioneer in the cheap book-trade, a pre-eminently energetic man, whose store under the Astor-house was deservedly popular, as its proprietor was a thoroughbred Gothamite, genial, hospitable and trustworthy. Adriance, bookseller, newsvender and publisher at times, took a remarkable fancy to the young Philadelphian, encouraging him by advice, precept and financial credit; and, as Adriance was an authority in his especial line, his friendship for a junior in a similar trade proved a guaranty for eventual success; and such was the result of his protege's enterprise, yet not without hard labor, for he was compelled to rise long before the dawn to purchase and carry himself his morning papers, and to make a second noon-day journey to secure a timely supply of the evening dailies, while Sunday yielded but an afternoon of rest.

While selling his papers, Mr. Queen mastered their contents, and this acquaintance with the material most in popular demand suggested an opportunity for venturing upon his long-cherished project of starting a newspaper of his own. At the time there was existing in New York what was justly termed the pugilistic craze, consequent upon the arrival in America of Ben Caunt, Yankee Sullivan and other magnates of the prize-ring. But one sporting newspaper was then being published in the entire American Union—The Spirit of the Times, edited by William T. Porter, with Thomas Picton as his associate—a publication that was both costly and high-toned. True, from the same office had for a brief period emanated The American Sporting Chronicle, a handsomely printed and comparatively cheap sheet, edited by the foreman of The Spirit, and owned by the printers, who were allowed use of such portions of the great sporting journal's matter as suited their convenience, while filling up the remainder of their publication with extracts from Bell's Life. The Chronicle soon attained a wide circulation, but was summarily suppressed by John Richards, owner of The Spirit, upon the presumption that its continuance might injure the value of his other newspaper property; and an endeavor to fill the void thus created determined Mr. Queen upon attempting establishment of THE CLIPPER. Some of the parties working upon The Chronicle, however, designed his anticipation in the newly-opened field through publishing The Sporting Rambler, under the editorial management of Francis S. Smith of the present New York Weekly, who had acquired considerable reputation as a humorous contributor to The Spirit under the pseudonym of "The Tenpin Boy;" but from some internal causes the venture proved a failure to its projectors.

The discarded title was, however, assumed a few years subsequently by Charles H. Peabody, who had for a series of years officiated as London correspondent of The Spirit of the Times, and then reappeared in this city in a futile endeavor, backed by capital loaned by English friends, to establish a formidable rival to that journal when in the heyday of its popularity. Peabody's American Chronicle was undeniably an able sheet, well filled with contributions by distinguished British sporting writers, which, had it been managed by an American of any note, would have assumed a prominent place in our newspaper literature; but Mr. Peabody, formerly a publisher in Broadway, whose store was demolished to make room for the Astor House, and the originator of The Knickerbocker Magazine, had become thoroughly Anglicized from his long residence abroad, and consequently failed to appreciate American sentiment. Illustrative of this change in social views, it can be mentioned that Mr. Peabody, finding his paper too expensive for his individual continuance, made proposals to "Governor" Richards of The Spirit, aiming for consolidation of the rival journals upon the basis of his marriage with Richards' daughter, a blooming damsel of sixteen, while the proffered groom was on the shady side of twoscore and ten. Rejection of this flattering offer culminated in a total extinguishment of the editor and of his Chronicle, he leaving the city in the condition of Distaffina—his rent was due, his debts were owing.

The financial panic succeeding the Great Fire of 1835 having completely bankrupted William T. Porter, the dispersion of his family became inevitable, in consequence of which he was deprived of the assistance of his brothers, who had previously participated largely in the editorial management of The Spirit and of The American Turf Register, the only sporting magazine then published in the United States, for the goodwill of which Mr. Porter had paid its founder, Col. F. S. Skinner of Baltimore, the sum of seventy thousand dollars. George Porter, a lawyer by profession, a highly educated man and the intimate friend of Herbert, Haws, Prescott Hall, and of the leading luminaries of the sporting world, transferred his tact and talent to The New Orleans Picayune, while Dr. Olcutt Porter, a writer of exquisite grace, and formerly a coadjutor with N. P. Willis in the literary conduct of The Corsair, accepted a professorship in Coudert's French Institute, which he held until his death. The paper and office-fixtures, including the valuable library and oil-paintings of celebrated American cracks by Troye and others, unfortunately destroyed in the recent conflagration of The Turf, Field and Farm office, passed through purchase under foreclosure of mortgage into possession of John Richards, an honest, whole-souled Englishman, a retired pressman, purchasing the entire establishment mainly to afford him congenial occupation, as its publisher for the remainder of his life, while surrendering its entire editorial care to its former proprietor.

"The Tall Son of York," personally the most popular editor within the confines of the American Union, can be assumed never to have fairly recovered from the indignity necessarily imposed upon him by his financial failure, rendering the assumption of an apparently subordinate position imperative, as his executive ability was so limited that, restored to his individual management, The Spirit would have succumbed to monetary pressure within the lapse of three months. Richards was a shrewd, cautious and most honorable business man, refusing to be inveigled into those self-same extravagances which had previously blighted Porter's abundant prosperity; and when, because of a knowledge of Editor Porter's growing dislike to his publisher, and because of an overestimate of Porter's personal influence, overtures were craftily made for the purchase of The Spirit, there was no uncertainty in the publisher's answer:

"No!" shouted 'The Governor' in scornful indignation. "I have money enough to keep The Spirit as long as I live, and it shall belong to Dick and Jones when I am dead and gone."

This determination was faithfully fulfilled, inasmuch as, although John Richards died suddenly and intestate, his heirs, a son and daughter, upon being made acquainted with their dead father's living promise, cheerfully ratified it through transfer of the paper and all its accessories, then a valuable property, to Dick—Mr. Hays, the office-boy, trained in the establishment, and a general favorite with its habitual visitors—and Jones, foreman of the printing department, who, years previously, had essayed The American Sporting Chronicle.

The appearance of Porter's Spirit of the Times announced William T. Porter's defection from the old establishment, and for a time his former literary friends rallied to the sustenance of an enterprise erroneously imagined to be of his own creation and for his personal benefit. Still, when the true causes for his alienation became promulgated and the insidious character of the publication identified, Porter's most enthusiastic admirers in town and country, while internally lamenting their friend's imbecility, tacitly yet effectively rebuked his ingratitude to a rough but honest benefactor, through withdrawal of countenance, literary and otherwise, from an experiment to which he contributed but the shadow of a name. This unfortunate prostitution of a well-earned reputation emphatically tolled William T. Porter's death-knell, inasmuch as within a year's time he was no more his former self than "Hyperion to a Satyr." Those who had known—nay, even loved—the literary monarch of the turf, the Beau Nash of the sporting world, the refined gentleman, whose society had been ever courted, lamented in sincerity of heart the very sight of their altered idol, degenerated, almost before their eyes, into a melancholy wreck, ambitionsless, moneyless and next to homeless, a perfect ruin through the indiscretion of a blinded trust.

To "Dick and Jones," Richards' legatees, was conjoined, as editor-in-chief, Col. Thomas B. Thorpe, formerly a writer in the Southwest, author of "Tom Owen the Bee-hunter," "The Big Bear of Arkansaw," and other semi-sporting sketches, who, having been an old-time friend of Porter and one of his earliest contributors, managed to gather around him the surviving fragment of what was popularly known as "The Spirit Crowd," once recognized as composed of the leading "men about town." Under Thorpe's assiduous direction the paper maintained the even tenor of its venerable way until the outbreak of the Civil War hermetically sealed its fate. Or all the editorial writers to the original Spirit of the Times but one solitary one survives in the flesh, and he is but three days the senior in birth of the late Mr. Queen.

HACKNESS WINS THE CAMBRIDGESHIRE.

The race for the Cambridgeshire Stakes, which had, for the first time on record, been postponed from the day before, because of rain, took place on Wednesday, Oct. 25, at Newmarket, Eng. The storm which prevailed on Tuesday, the effects of which were seen at every point on the way to Newmarket, kept many away, and the attendance was not nearly as large as is usual on either the Cambridgeshire or the Dewhurst day. The race had thirty-one starters, the same number as in 1879, when Lord Rosebery won with La Merveille. The American-bred division included J. R. Keene's Don Fulano and Bookmaker, P. Lorillard's Sachem and Lord Ellesmere's Wallenstein, none of which succeeded in being placed. R. Peck's Hackness (88lb) won by three lengths from Shrewsbury (94), who was four lengths in front of Venusta (83). Among the other starters there were several prominent winners, including Lefevre's Tristan, W. S. Crawfurd's Buchanan and St. Marguerite, Prince Soltykoff's Scobell, Leopold de Rothschild's Nellie, R. S. Evans' Falkirk, Lord Stamford's Geheimniss (the winner of the Epsom Oaks) and others. The betting at the start was 7 to 1 each against Hackness and Shrewsbury and 100 to 1 against Venusta. The race is a handicap for three-year-olds and upwards, $125 each, $1,500 added, $500 to second, a mile and 240 yards. The Dewhurst Plate, for two-year-olds, $25 each, $1,500 added, seven furlongs, was run for the same day, and was won by C. J. Lefevre's Ladislas (121), with Goldfield second and Acrostic third. The Cheveley Stakes, two-year-olds, $100 each, $1,000 added, Rous course, was likewise run for and won by Beauchamp's Pastrycook (122); Fred second and Splendor third. Among the seven runners was J. R. Keene's Blue Grass. The Criterion Nursery Handicap, for two-year-olds, $125 each, $750 added, was won by Lord Hartington's Corunna, with Fleur d'Orange second and Blue Rock third.

COURT DECISION.—The Supreme Court of Iowa has decided that a county agricultural society may offer premiums for the winner of a horse-race to be held on the grounds during the continuance of its annual fair; and an agreement by a county agricultural society to pay a certain sum as premium for the horse winning a race held at its annual fair is not against the public policy, and an action may be maintained for such premium by one becoming entitled thereto at such race. Offering a premium is not a bet or wager.

MUSICAL.

THE ROYAL HAWAIIAN MILITARY BAND has a representative now in this country in Bandmaster Henry Berger, who arrived in San Francisco recently. He has furnished some interesting particulars in regard to the organization he directs. First, Mr. Berger is famous in his adopted country as the composer of the Hawaiian national hymn "Hawaii Ponoi," the words of which were written by no less a personage than His Majesty King Kalakaua. Mr. Berger is likewise famous as the organizer of the Royal Hawaiian Military Band of twenty-eight pieces, and every member of the band is a pure native Hawaiian. It was organized ten years ago, at which time the members were as ignorant of the simplest rudiments of music as the untutored Indian of the plains. The force of education, patience and persistence has had a striking result. To-day the band can play the most complicated music, and its members are at home with Bellini, Verdi, Rossi, Wagner, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Offenbach, Lecocq, Strauss, and other masters of the divine art. Eminent foreigners who have visited Honolulu have paid the highest compliments to this native band, and said that it could compare favorably with the very best European bands. It is claimed by the Hawaiians, natives and foreigners, that their military band excels any organization of the kind in San Francisco, and it is probable that there may be a test of this next Summer, as the Hawaiian Government has consented to allow the band to make a visit to that city. The band is attached to the military service of the Government, and its members receive from $30 to $40 per month, according to proficiency. The pay of Bandmaster Berger is $250 per month. The gentleman is a Prussian by birth, and received his musical education in Germany and France. He gives the Hawaiians credit for great natural talents for music, and says that it only requires ceaseless patience to make them as perfect musicians as are to be found in Europe or America.

AN INFRINGEMENT on the copyright of a song was prosecuted in the United States Circuit Court, Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 20. A Philadelphia publisher had published, it was alleged, a cheap lithographic edition of the copyrighted song "Barney McCoy" under the title of "Come to My Arms, Noah Darling," the words in both pieces being the same. To show their musical likeness a witness played each song in turn upon the violin, and declared that he had given them as they were written, and that in his opinion the melody in each was identical. In some places a little difference was noticeable, but he made no distinction where the difference was only an octave higher or lower. The witness thought that there were just enough alterations in the imitation to convey the idea that it had been intended to evade the law. An injunction was granted against the Philadelphian restraining the publication of the song.

ADVICES FROM LONDON, ENG., dated Oct. 19, say: "'The Merry War' at the Alhambra made a failure, mainly because the leading roles were entrusted to a German woman and a Frenchman who knew very little, if any, English..... Planquette's 'Rip Van Winkle' is a big success at the Royal Comedie Theatre. Sadie Martinot made a sad failure in a small part. The music is in Planquette's sweetest strain, and the author of 'Les Cloches de Corneville' received an ovation. The libretto could be materially improved upon. The Rip of Fred Leslie is a masterpiece of make-up, acting and singing. Violet Cameron is only fair; there is too much sameness in everything the lady attempts. The success belongs to Planquette and Leslie.... Edmund Gerson has purchased from Planquette his next opera, which is to be first produced in America. The libretto is written, the score half composed, and the piece can be produced before the year is out. The composer says so, and he ought to know."

THE KNOCKED-OUT MANAGER SHOWS FIGHT.—Our Indianapolis, Ind., correspondent writes: "There has been a great deal said here about the Sargent-Sullivan-Madden imbroglio, and the following—condensed and excerpted from a local journal of Oct. 25—is about the latest: Mr. Sargent has brought suit for a dissolution of the existing company's partnership and for the appointment of a receiver He claims that by the terms of the contract, after all expenses were paid, Sullivan was to receive $250 each week, and the remainder was to be divided between Madden, Sullivan's trainer, and himself. He was left in the city 20 without money for traveling expenses, while there is due him about $500. He says that Madden handled the money of the company, while he (Sargent) attended to the advertising and general management. Sullivan and troupe reached this city 24, en route from Louisville, Ky., to Terre Haute, Ind. At the Union Depot they were met by a Deputy sheriff, who served the necessary papers pertaining to Sargent's suit. During the afternoon a meeting was held at the office of the attorneys retained by Sargent to consult over the matter. Sullivan was accompanied by two pugilists of the troupe, one of whom innocently inquired: 'How much will it cost me to lick that fellow?' (meaning Sargent). Mr. Norton of the law firm turned to the statute, and read to him that the maximum punishment was $1,000 fine and six months' imprisonment. 'Great guns!' was the ejaculation of the pugilist. 'I want to get out of Indiana as quick as I can. The laws are h—l here—and so are the people. Why, I read the other day about a mob taking a man out of the jail at Evansville and hanging him. —— the Hoosiers!' Sullivan and his party left for Terre Haute at four o'clock in the afternoon, but the former will have to return here Nov. 3 to appear in answer to Mr. Sargent's complaint."

LEON'S PERFORMANCES and the other features of Haverly's Mastodon Minstrels are glowingly referred to by the Baltimore press. Leon's caricature of Patti in one of the scenes is said to be admirably drawn, and his dresses afford a sensation for the feminine portion of the audience. The following extract from numerous press notices is full of good words:

Notwithstanding the rain, Haverly's Mastodon Consolidated Minstrels have filled Ford's with immense audiences all the week. Every visitor unhesitatingly declares that this is the best minstrel show ever seen in this city. The "Only Leon" is generally acknowledged to be the best in his line of character impersonations on the stage, and this season he is sustaining his reputation. His new clothes, made by Worth of Paris, are immense, and the ladies raise their lorgnettes whenever he comes on the stage. His caricature of La Diva Patti is worth going a long way to see. He brings down the house, and is not suffered to depart till the scenes are drawn to show off the Zouave drum corps, who perform in a wonderful manner, and the plantation scene, with the dance and byplay, are excellent and new. The piece de resistance, however, is the Patti Soiree. This is a grand finale, and leaves the departing guests in a humor which lasts long enough to bring them again to Ford's. In this closing act the whole company is seen to great advantage. Here come the drum corps, Mr. Ray, the interlocutor; Peter Mac, and Leon as Mme. Patti, in his gorgeous classic costume, which takes the eye. Frank Cushman's acting as Vanderbuilt's servant in this piece was as fine a piece of acting as we ever witnessed.—Baltimore Herald, Oct. 19.

PHILADELPHIA'S BI-CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION was inaugurated at midnight on Monday, 23, by tolling the State-house bell two hundred times and the singing of "Hail Columbia" by the combined German singing societies of the city in front of that historical edifice. Considerable difficulty was experienced by the singers in reaching the space allotted to them on account of the crowded condition of the streets in the vicinity, which were literally one mass of living humanity. Tuesday, Landing-day, was probably the grandest ever seen in this city. The ceremonies were commenced in the morning by a grand naval procession of steamers lashed together in pairs, escorting the "Welcome," containing Wm. Penn and his followers. The procession started from Greenwich Point, just below the city, and when reaching the old Navy-yard was saluted by the guns of the North Atlantic Squadron, which was anchored at that point. The landing was made at the foot of Dock street, in the presence of a vast concourse of people, where William Penn, personated by A. R. Vanhorn, was received by Thomas Holmes, Surveyor General, personated by William Courtright; Captain Markham, Deputy Governor, by J. C. Johnson; and eighty-five Indians, representing the Delaware and Iroquois tribes, headed by Tamanen Sachem of the Delawares, personated by William J. Hanger. After the reception ceremonies, the Penn party made its way through the vast crowd to join the grand civic procession forming on Broad street, which consisted of officers, sailors and marines from the United States fleet, anchored off the city, officers and employes of the United States Mint, Custom-house and Post-office; officials and employes of the various departments of the city government, the Penn landing party, Improved Order of Red-men, the various German singing and other societies, Philadelphia Association of Volunteer Firemen and visiting fire companies, cavalcade of butchers, Catholic total-abstinence societies, Scotch and English societies, Knights of Pythias, United American Mechanics, Italian Beneficial Society, American Protestant Association, etc. The streets along the entire route of the procession were densely crowded, making locomotion difficult. The route of this, as well as all the parades, was from Broad street to Chestnut, to Third, to Market, to Broad, to Columbia avenue. The first day's festivities were brought to a successful close by an illuminated naval review of the various Philadelphia boat-clubs on the Schuylkill River and a very fine display of fireworks in Fairmount Park. Wednesday—Trades' day—was devoted to the trade interests, and the parade will long be remembered as the largest display of the kind ever organized in Philadelphia. About 1400 men, one thousand wagons and two thousand horses, representing over two hundred and fifty business houses, were in line, and for over four hours wound its way over the designated route, through the multitude of eager sight-seers, which was as large if not larger than on the day previous. The most unique event of the celebration was the grand Mystic Pageant on the night of Trades' day. It consisted of a series of illuminated allegorical tableaux, mounted on floats and drawn by horses, attendants leading the horses. The parade was in three divisions, the first division comprising tableaux illustrating some of the most interesting events in the early history of the State. The second division consisted of tableaux representing illustrious women, historical and mythological, and the third tableau, illustrative of an Indian poem, "The Ramayana." There were thirty-eight tableaux in all, each one preceded by an ordinary express wagon containing a calcium light, while colored men carrying chemical lights marched by the side of each float, which arrangement proved insufficient to properly light the tableaux. It would have added much to the effectiveness of the pageant had the horses drawing the floats been caparisoned and the attendants properly costumed. The day's festivities, after the parade, were brought to a close by a reception and ball at the Academy of Music, given by the Bicentennial Mystic Tableau Association. Thursday was marked by a procession of Knight templars, consisting of all the local commanderies and visiting commanderies from Washington, Baltimore, Georgetown, Wilmington, Delaware, Richmond, New York, Camden, Newark, Burlington, Bordentown, Asbury Park, Poughkeepsie, Providence, Reading, Scranton, Pottsville, Norristown, Allentown, Easton, Pittsburg, and Allegheny City. The procession, though the shortest of the series, taking but an hour to pass a given point, was the most beautiful. A reception was given in the evening at the Academy of Music to the visiting Sir Knights by the Philadelphia Commanderies. Other prominent features of the celebration on this day were a regatta on the Schuylkill, a bicycle tournament in Fairmount Park, an archery contest, also in the park, and a game of cricket at Nicetown. The most imposing street display of the celebration took place on Friday, when fifteen thousand uniformed men marched to the blare of brass and tap of the drum through the crowded streets. The parade was composed of three brigades of the National Guard of Pennsylvania, a battalion of cavalry, a battalion of artillery, one brigade of New Jersey State militia, cadets of Pennsylvania Military Academy, Girard College cadets, Lincoln Institute cadets and eighty Posts of the Grand Army of the Republic. In addition to the features of the celebration already mentioned, a grand musical festival was held at Allison's car shop. Thirty-second and Chestnut streets, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, when five Welsh choral societies gave a series of four competitive concerts, and the various German singing societies of the city and State also gave concerts. The festivities were formally closed Friday night at the Academy of Music, when thirteen hundred school girls joined their voices in concert, and speeches were made by District-attorney Graham, E. C. Knight, president of the Bi-centennial Association, and Governor Hoyt, who made the closing address. Owing to the terrible calamity by which seven persons lost their lives by the bursting of a bomb during the display of fireworks in the park on Tuesday night, Mayor King prohibited the display which was to have taken place Friday night on Broad street. With the exception of that and affair everything passed off with the greatest eclat, and Philadelphia's Bi-centennial Celebration will long be remembered with pleasure by her own citizens and tens of thousands of strangers who were within her gates during its continuance.

THE WORLD OF AMUSEMENT.

Brief Notes of Show-life Everywhere.

— A cable dispatch to The Telegram of this city states that at the production of Octave Feuillet's new play of "Le Roman Parisien" at the Gymnase, Paris, Saturday night, Oct 28, those who distinguished themselves were Mme. Pasca as Mme. De Targy, Mlle. Brindau as Marcelle, Mlle. Volsy as Theresa, M. Marais as Henri (the hero), M Laudrel as Dr. Chesnel, and M. Frederick Achard as the tenor Juliani. The dispatch adds that the play was a success; but a later cabling states that the critics Sarcy and Lapommeraye handle it very severely. The new comedy of "La Rue Boulean," produced on Oct. 30 at the Theatres des Menus Plaisirs, Paris, was a failure, which not even the good acting of M Delaunay and Mme. Vaudrick could avert. The authors are Mm. Terrier-Vast and Ricouard.

— Rome, Italy, has a sensation. Signor Coccapeiller a circus rider, was on Oct. 29 elected to a seat in the Chamber of Deputies. He is a violent Radical in politics.

— Adelina Patti and Signor Nicolini arrived from Europe Oct. 31.

— The mother-in-law of John Cannon of the Theatre Comique, this city, died last week.

— William Dutton, bareback rider, is to sail for England this week. James Donovan, also of circus renown, goes along, and so does William Batchellor, the leaper.

— Charles S. Rogers writes us that he has purchased the drama entitled "Jack" for Miss Mattie Vickers, and that both of them will begin a professional tour in it next February.

— Miss Helen Vincent is expected home from Par s about Nov 15.

— "Love and Money" is the title of a new romantic drama by Chas. Reade which he is to produce in the Adelphi, London, Nov 18, under his own management.

— Miss Hattie Anderson, daughter of George W. Anderson, who a quarter of a century ago was known here as an Irish comedian and singer, is now traveling with the Gorman Church-choir Company as under study for some of the leading roles.

— After having been engaged to sing "Sigh No More, Ladies," in "Much Ado About Nothing" at the Lyceum Theatre, London, Herbert Reeves backed out.

— Charles F. Coghlan is to join the company of the Court Theatre, London, in November.

— It is said of Tennyson that he has entered into a contract with Mrs Bernard Beere, the London manager who is to produce his new pastoral piece, tending to make his language sacred. Any violation of the text by the management or the actors will vitiate the contract, as runs the story, and leave Tennyson free to withdraw the play.

— The Connaught Theatre, London, is to be rebuilt. When opened in its new form it will be managed by Miss Emily Duncan, who will be remembered here as one of the members of Lydia Thompson's Troupe.

— The American rights of the blood-curdling English drama "Forever," in which a monkey saws at the throat of a woman, have been purchased by R. D'Oyly Carte, it is stated.

— Blind Tom is to be heard at Steinway Hall Nov 2.

— The California soprano Miss Mary Wadsworth is to be heard for the first time in this city on Nov 13 at the Alcazar, in the comic opera "Crispino e Comare," arranged by herself to suit herself.

— Bronson Howard is shortly to return to England.

— Charles Gilday and Fannie Beane, who have just returned from England, reappeared in this city on the night of Oct. 30.

— Malvina Renner, the Tyrolienne singer with Stanley's Allied Shows, was taken seriously ill during the engagement of the company in Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 23. She will remain another week there, and expects to join the company in St. Louis Nov. 6

— Eleanor Calhoun, who is playing in the Imperial Theatre, London, has been taking lessons of John Ryder since she played Ophelia and Desdemona in the Crystal Palace last Summer.

— Great preparations are being made by Cincinnatians for their opera festival, which is to be held at Music Hall, commencing Jan. 29, 1883. Among the principal artists engaged are Mme. Patti and Signors Nicolini and Galassi. Everything indicates a successful season.

— Emilie Melville, it is said, has commenced a suit for breach of contract against Williamson, Garner & Musgrove in Melbourne, Australia. It is alleged that she was engaged up to Christmas at a salary of £150 per week.

DEATHS IN THE PROFESSION.

ALICE WITHERELL died in Burke, N. Y., Oct. 22, aged 23 years. Kit Clark furnishes the following particulars of her career: "From her infancy she developed a talent for music, and when 12 years old performed cornet-solos in public. For several years she was with her family, known as the Witherell Bros.' Concert Co., as violin and cornet soloist, and during 1879 and 1880 was a feature with Leavitt's Kentz Minstrels and Vienna Orchestra. March 24, 1879, she was married to E. F. Lindsey, leader with that company. During 1880-1 she and her husband traveled with Beedle & Prindle's Pleasure Party and made a specialty of her clarionet and musical act with her husband. Last Winter her husband formed a company called the Lindsey Concert Company, and his wife accompanied him on the tour in the far West. Her death was caused by Bright's disease, aggravated by childbirth and she has left an infant daughter."

DEATH OF EMILY GAVIN.—A cablegram received in Chicago, Ill., Oct. 25, announced the death of this lady in Algiers. About six months ago she was taken ill with a disease of the lungs, and early in September last she, in company with a lady friend, sailed for Europe. When she left Paris, France, about a fortnight ago, it was thought that her health was improving, but on arriving in Algiers a change took place, and she wasted away rapidly. She was born, reared and educated in Chicago, and after leaving the high-school she became a teacher in one of the public schools there. As she evinced some talent as a dramatic reader, she came to this city and received instruction from a well-known elocutionist, and after returning to Chicago she continued her studies under the direction of Mrs. Anna Cowell Hobkirk. After making her debut as a reader she made a tour of the Northwest under the management of the Slayton Lyceum Bureau of Chicago. She made her debut on the dramatic stage in the Grand Opera house, this city, May 6, 1878, under the name of Emily Granard, acting Lady Macbeth. She subsequently played in Haverly's Theatre, Chicago, which was about the extent of her experience as an actress.

CHARLES STUART, manager of the Star Music Hall, Manchester, Eng., died there Oct. 4.

F. H. WATSON, acting-manager, died in London, Eng., Oct. 12, aged 50. His wife—Miss Annie Taylor—is in Australia.

GUS DUBOIS, a well known variety performer and stage-manager, died of consumption in Peoria, Ill., Oct. 27, and his remains were taken to Chicago for interment. He was last engaged at J. M. Gable's Adelphi Theatre, in Peoria.

BASEBALL.

ST. LOUIS vs. ECLIPSE.

The above-named clubs contended Oct. 21 in St. Louis, Mo., before a small assemblage. Sommers and McPhee of the Cincinnatis and McCaffrey of St. Louis filled out the nine of the visitors, while Peters of the Alleghenys guarded right field for the home-team. The result was never in doubt, the Browns taking the lead at the outset, and holding it easily to the close.

CHICAGO vs. PROVIDENCE.

The eighth game of the exhibition-series between the Chicago and Providence Clubs was played Oct. 23 in Chicago, Ill., before about three hundred people. The home-team earned six runs in the second inning by bunching six safe hits, including a home-run by Gore when three men were on the bases. The visitors' hits were scattered except in the fourth inning, when good batting and an error by Flint let in four runs.

CINCINNATI vs. BRENNAN.

A combination team of Cincinnati professionals and amateurs arrived in New Orleans, La., Oct. 22, and on the afternoon of that day played the Brennans—the local champions—before about two thousand people. The visitors bunched five safe hits in the fifth inning, when they earned four runs. The lead thus gained proved sufficient to win, although the home-team made a good rally at the bat in the next two innings. Carpenter did the best batting, his three safe hits including two double-baggers. The score was:

PROVIDENCE vs. METROPOLITAN.

The thirteenth game this season between the above-named clubs was played Oct. 27 at the Polo Grounds, and resulted in an easy victory for the visitors, who substituted Ferguson and Cassidy of the Troys and Richmond of the Worcesters in the place of Farrell, Denny and Radbourn. Excellent batting by Ward, Cassidy and York, and fine fielding by Ferguson, Kennedy and Esterbrook were the chief features of a rather loosely played contest. The score:

THE BALTIMORE CLUB was not represented at the recent meeting of the American Association, and it was generally understood that it had resigned. A team under the management of Wm. H. Barnie was, however, elected to fill the vacancy. It is said to be backed by wealthy residents of Baltimore, and will play upon Newington Park, in that city. Applications for membership were also made by the New York Club, the Merritts of Camden, N. J.; the Ætnas of Chicago, Ill.; and the Columbus (O.) Club. There was also a request from a second Baltimore club and another New York club, but the first was subsequently withdrawn and the latter was declared to be too poor to receive. It was decided to limit the number of clubs to eight, and, to have a perfect circuit in the West, Columbus was accepted. The superiority in population of New York and Baltimore over Camden secured them the choice in the East. Secretary Williams was authorized to contract with the three clubs which were passed upon favorably, and they will be formally admitted at the December meeting in this city. The case of the Cincinnati Club, charged with violating the rules in playing with Cleveland and Chicago, was settled by the Cincinnatis, through their representative, agreeing to accept a reprimand and fine, and they were allowed to remain.

A CLOSELY-CONTESTED GAME took place Oct. 24 at Recreation Park, Philadelphia, between the Philadelphia and Metropolitan Clubs, it being the eleventh of the series for a silver trophy. The home-team in the second inning scored the solitary run which counted. No more runs were made until the seventh, when the Mets by good batting obtained two. The Philadelphias in their half of this inning had got one man on base and one was out, when Al. Reach, the manager of that club, who was acting as umpire, called the game on account of alleged darkness against the vigorous protests of the Metropolitans. The score thus went back to the sixth inning, giving the victory to the Philadelphias by 1 to 0. The concluding contest took place 25, and resulted in a victory for the Metropolitans by a score of 9 to 4. The game was remarkable for hard hitting and fine fielding. The home-team temporarily took the lead in the eighth inning, when they made three runs, but the visitors scored six runs for their share of the same inning. Excellent catches were made by Moynahan and McClellan. This victory of the Metropolitans makes the race for the silver punch-bowl a tie, each club having won six games. The Philadelphias wished to play the deciding game 26, but the Metropolitans refused to play on account of dissatisfaction at Reach's action in calling the game as abovementioned.

THE COLUMBIAN COLLEGE NINE of Washington, D. C., closed their season Oct. 24 by defeating the Howards of Alexandria, Va., by a score of 10 to 7. The Columbians won all but three of the sixteen games played. Davidson led in batting and Domer in fielding.

was born about twenty-five years ago in Philadelphia, Pa. He played for several seasons with amateur clubs of Germantown, a suburban district of his native city, generally filling the position of second-base. His professional career commenced in 1878, when he was engaged by the Hartford Club, which had but a brief existence. He was then secured by the Athletics, with whom he has remained up to the present time, with the exception of the season of 1880, when he guarded third-base and afterwards left-field for the Baltimore Club until it was disbanded, and then joined the Globe—a semi-professional team of his native city. He has figured favorably in over three hundred games during the four seasons he has been connected with the Athletics. Birchall first filled the position of second-base for the Athletics, but during the last two seasons he has guarded left-field for that club, making by his remarkable running-catches and splendid throwing an enviable reputation. We may mention as an instance of the many bits of fine fielding credited to Birchall one effected in the Athletic-Cincinnati contest June 1, 1882, when the present champions of the American Association were blanked. The Cincinnatis' nearest approach to scoring was in the ninth inning, when, with two out and men on third and second bases, Birchall made a wonderful one-handed jumping-catch at left-field off Luff's terrific hit, which was seemingly sure to be a home-run. His other wonderful catches at critical points have also helped the Athletics to many a victory. He is an excellent batter, as is shown by the fact of his accomplishing in the Athletic-St. Louis game, May 27 last, the difficult feat of making five successive safe hits, including two double-baggers. His chief point of excellence, however, is his clever base-running, in which respect he is considered one of the best in the professional ranks. As an instance of his skill as a base-runner we cite the fact that he performed the phenomenal feat of making nine runs without even getting a solitary safe hit in four successive games against St. Louis last August. He is an honest, hard-working player, always working for the best interest of his club, and his genial disposition has endeared him alike to the players and patrons of the game in the Quaker City, where nearly all his ball-playing career has been passed.

AN EXCITING CONTEST took place Oct. 20 in Painted Post between the local team and the Coshocton Club of Liberty, N. Y. The home-team won by a score of 7 to 4, notwithstanding the fact that the visitors were strengthened by Weidman of the Detroits, and Kennedy, formerly of the Clevelands, in the respective positions of pitcher and catcher. The winners, although twelve men struck out, were credited with eight safe hits off Weidman. Fitzpatrick pitched effectively for Painted Post, and was well supported, especially by McGovern, behind the bat.

THE CHICAGO CLUB disbanded in Chicago, Ill., Oct. 26, after an exhibition benefit game. A noteworthy feature was Ed. N. Williamson's throwing the ball and running the bases in an attempt to beat the records. It is claimed that he slightly exceeded Hatfield's long-throw of 133yds. 1ft. 7¼in. and ran the bases in 14¼s. Geo. F. Gore of the Chicagos is alleged to have made in San Francisco, in December last, the best time in running the bases, viz., 14¼s. Williamson's throw and Gore's time need, however, to be properly authenticated.

ROSS BARNES, who has been engaged during the past two years by a railroad company to hunt up stray freight-cars, has entered into partnership with Louis H. Mahn in the ball-manufacturing business. An extensive factory has been established for that purpose in South Natick, Mass., where Barnes will attend personally to business, while Mahn will take a brief vacation in order to visit Berlin and Paris to complete the musical education of his fourteen-year-old son, who is very highly spoken of by competent critics as a promising violinist.

HARRISON HARWOOD, a well-known manufacturer of baseballs, died about two months ago at his residence in Natick, Mass. The deceased, who was in his sixty-eighth year, began in 1859 to make it a regular business to manufacture baseballs, and for the first eight years made substantially all the balls that were thrown among the dealers. For several years he sold $200,000 worth of goods per annum, and employed not less than three hundred hands.

THE TWO CONCLUDING GAMES of the new series between the Anthracite Club of Pottsville and the Actives of Reading, Pa., were played Oct. 23 and 24 on the latter club's grounds. The Anthracites were the winners by the respective scores of 10 to 5 and 16 to 7. A brass band, fireworks, speeches and a large procession welcomed the Anthracite team when they returned to Pottsville.

THE TONY DENIER NINE defeated the Elite Club Oct. 23 in Ironton, Pa., by a score of 17 to 11. The local team included several of the players of the champion amateur club of Ohio.

HENRY A. DITSON of the well-known Boston firm of Wright & Ditson was in this city last week. His partner, George Wright, has permanently bid farewell to the baseball field.

NINES REPRESENTING Amherst and Williams Colleges contended Oct. 25 in Amherst, Mass., the result being a victory for Amherst by a score of 5 to 0.

AT A RECENT MEETING of the directors of the St. Louis Browns a gift of $200 was voted to the secretary, David L. Reid, as extra compensation for his services.

YALE COLLEGE is to have a new ball-ground next season. The field has been sown with the best grass-seed, after having been leveled so perfectly that there is not a depression of half an inch in its whole surface.

A NORTHWESTERN LEAGUE was organized Oct. 27 by delegates representing Indianapolis and Fort Wayne, Ind., Peoria and Springfield, Ill., Grand Rapids and Bay City, Mich., Toledo, O., and Milwaukee, Wis.

A NOVEL CONTEST took place Oct. 8 in San Francisco, Cal., between the Olympics and the Featherstone-Adams amateurs. Nine innings were played, the Olympic players using only their left hands. The game resulted in a tie—20 to 20.

THE ROSE HILL CLUB of St. John's College defeated the Yonkers Club Oct. 26 on the former's ground, in this city, by a score of 9 to 2.

AT THE ANNUAL SPORTS of the students of Williams College, held Oct. 18 in Williamstown, Mass., Corse was credited with a throw of 122yds.

THE BOSTON management claim that the contract signed by Whitney to play with the St. Louis Browns was signed on a Sunday, and is therefore void. This is a mistake, as Whitney may find to his cost. The contract is dated Aug. 12, 1882, which happens to be Saturday. Whitney has since signed with the Boston Club for 1883, and his violation of contract with St. Louis will cause the latter club to commence legal proceedings against him.

WM. H. MCGUNNIGLE, whose lame arm has kept him from playing during the last two seasons, has got well at last, and purposes re-entering the professional arena in 1883. He is a good general player, being a first-class outfielder and able to pitch and catch in an emergency. He won THE CLIPPER medal for the best play at right-field during the season of 1878.

A NUMBER OF BOYS were playing baseball in this city Oct. 22, when Edward Sigler threw a ball to Andrew Daly, which, being missed by the latter, struck him in the breast and knocked him down. The police arrested Sigler on a charge of assault.

JULES WILLIGROD, who played this season with the Detroits and Clevelands, has settled down in Omaha, Neb., and will in future play with the Union Pacifics of that city.

GEO. W. BURNHAM of Detroit, Mich., has applied for the position of League umpire for next season. He has a good record and has been highly recommended.

CHARLEY JONES' appealed suit against the Cincinnati Club has been dismissed.

CRAB-RACING.—This is the latest form of sporting amusement and speculating on the coast of Normandy. The crabs are weighed, handicapped and placed on the beach. Bets are made, each nominator holding his finger on the shell of the crab that carries his colors and fortunes. When the starter waves his handkerchief, the impost digits are removed, and the crabs, by instinct, make for the sea, which is the finish of the race. To such an extent has the sport been carried, that the length of the course has been definitely fixed at 20 metres, between 60 and 70 feet.

MCQUIGIN VS. CROSSLEY.—On Oct. 28 F. J. McQuigin of Cambridge, Mass., and a representative of John T. Crossley of Philadelphia met at THE CLIPPER office and made a match to run one hundred and thirty yards, for five hundred dollars, at the South Weymouth, Mass., trotting-park, on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 18. The match is made play or pay, and will be run from a fifteen-foot scratch start, between 3 and 5 o'clock. The second deposit, $100 a side, must be put up in this office before 5 P. M. BICYCLING IN FRANCE.—The Executive Committee of the Bicycle Union have called the attention of English amateur riders to the fact that by a decision of the Congress of French bicyclists, recently held at Grenoble, the distinction between amateurs and professionals is entirely abolished in France. Any Englishman, therefore, competing in France, except against members of the Dieppe, Calais and Rouen Clubs, who did not take part in the Grenoble Congress, and still abide by the English Bicycle Union rules, will render himself liable to be declared a professional.

HARVARD FRESHMEN GAMES.

Owing to the progress of a foot-ball game between Harvard and Technology, on Holmes' Field, Cambridge, Mass., on Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 25, there was not a very large attendance, save of freshmen, at the freshmen athletic meeting, held on the same afternoon. The first event was the 100-yards dash, in the first heat of which A. E. Lawrence, F. T. Cooper, D. C. Clark and L. Lincoln Jr. competed. Clark won in 11¼sec. In the next heat W. Baker defeated H. G. Locke and S. Cary in 10½ sec., without being pushed. In the third heat R. D. Smith defeated F. S. Churchill in 11sec. The final heat was contested by Clark, Baker and Smith. Baker won in 10½sec. The mile run was contested by R. H. Delafield, C. Guild, S. Coolidge and G. B. Somers. Delafield won in 5m. 12s. W. H. Cole was the only entry in the mile-walk. and A. E. Lawrence was the solitary aspirant for honor in the hurdle-race. The quarter-mile run brought out H. G. Locke, W. Baker, G. Bradford, and S. Penrose. Baker allowed Bradford to keep at his heels and finished in 59⅗s. The running long-jump was won by L. Lincoln Jr., who covered 18ft., beating W. A. Stebbins. The running high-jump was won by W. A. Stebbins, 5ft. 1½in., defeating Faulkner, Cary, Kimball and Clark, who dropped out in the order named. The 220-yard dash was won with ease by W. Baker, over S. Penrose, in 25½s. The officers were: Referee, Dr. D. A. Sargent; timekeepers—M. S. Crehore, '82, and R. D. Haw Jr., '83; starter, T. J. Coolidge, '84; clerk, W. M. Burr, '84. As a whole, the meeting was not creditable to the class. Surely, the largest class that ever entered Harvard ought to begin with a better record in athletics than this meeting has shown. Baker was the redeeming feature of the day. Without him the meeting would have been very tame. His graceful and easy running was in itself worth attendance at the games.

HOYLE & ACTON have decided to "shut down" on the handicap they had announced to give on Thanksgiving-day, in order not to clash with Gormley & Dawson, whose tenth all-United States 135-yards foot-handicap will come off at Pastime Park (instead of New Hunting Park, as previously announced) on Nov. 30. The entries which have been received by Hoyle & Acton will be transferred to Gormley & Dawson. For additional particulars of handicap those interested are referred to an advertisement in our business department.

FRANK MOORE, the English amateur bicycle-rider, has returned to England, and, according to the sporting-press of that country, he speaks highly of the courtesy shown him wherever he went while in America.

HENRY MCGRATH and Martin Dempsey have signed articles to wrestle collar-and-elbow style, best two out of three falls, on Friday, Nov. 17, at Barney Wood's Athletic Grounds, Williamsburg, L. I.

SCOTT OUTRAN JENKINS in a race of one hundred yards at Moosepath Park, St. John, N. B., Oct. 25, he coming in about a yard in advance.

It is agreed on all hands that the second tie game with Winawer is a consummate exhibition of the nerve, style and power of Herr Steinitz when in "straits" and taxed to his utmost. Remember, he is fighting for a division of first and second prizes, as vs. second prize, and giving the odds of "the draw."

NOTES (Chess Monthly) CONDENSED.

(a) Unnecessary; consequently a lost move.

(b) If his attack succeeds, well and good; if not, the isolated P must prove a great weakness in the end game.

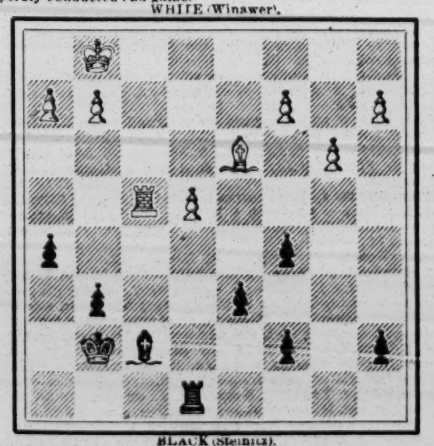
(c) Must, or P to K 5 would be irresistible.

(d) Having failed to break through, Herr W. now bends all his energies to secure a draw.

(e) In Steinitz's happiest style! Herr W. is bent on exchanging Queens, S. acquiesces—the continuation showing he had a move in store which gave him a chance of victory.

(f) We depict the field that our readers may more readily trace a superbly-conducted end game.

WHITE (Winawer).



BLACK (Steinitz).

28..P to Q B 5—a splendid move indeed! White must either take or retire B; in either case 29..Q R to K 4, followed by R to R 4, or P to Kt 4, winning a P.

(g) White could not 32..× B without losing another P; but now if Black B × P; 33..R to Q R sq, R to R 4; 34..B to B 4, winning the exchange.

(h) Throwing away the last chance of a possible draw.

(i) We do not recognize Winawer's judgment at all; how are the Pawns on K's side to be defended after the exchange of Rooks?

THE adoption of Swayne's Ointment by those disfigured with skin-diseases is worth attention of the reader.—Evening Telegraph.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ QUESTIONS THAT DO NOT REACH THIS OFFICE UNTIL TUESDAY MORNING WILL NOT BE ANSWERED UNTIL THE FOLLOWING WEEK.

VETERAN.—1. Like many others of our querists, you probably do not realize that you give us unnecessary trouble by asking two questions in order to get one answered, the latter in your case being as to whether or not Charles Santley has ever sung the role of Fra Diavolo. He has done so frequently here and in England. 2. It is not convenient for us to procure the cast of "Fra Diavolo" at our Academy of Music by the Parepa-Rosa Troupe, with which to honor your other question; but we can give you that of the same company at the Brooklyn Academy of Music two or three nights later, or Feb. 17, 1872, which cast was probably the same as that at our own Academy: Diavolo, Charles Santley; Zerlina, Jennie Van Zandt; Lady Allcash, Mrs. Zelda Seguin; Lord Allcash, Edward Seguin; Lorenzo, Thomas Whiffen; Beppo, S. C. Campbell; Giacomo, G. F. Hall; Matteo, Ellis Ryse.

PROFESSOR.—We do not entertain questions as to the relative seating capacities of theatres, for the reason, as we have frequently explained, that there is no standard of measurement, and for the further reason that changes are constantly going on. Thus we should not only have to make the measurements ourselves after a uniform standard, in order to render comparisons valuable, but should also have to keep measuring all the time in order to give absolutely accurate answers. See reply to "W. H. B."

MUSIC, Holmesburg.—The words of the dialect flower-girl song sung by Mattie Vickers are hers. The melody is one that has been used by J. K. Emmet. The tendency of this combination is to prevent the publication of words and music in conjunction. If the melody is Mr. Emmet's property, it is almost a certainty that it has been published somewhere, but under what name we could not tell without hearing the song Miss Vickers is singing.

GYMNAST, Indianapolis.—1. See answer to "A. E. A., Philadelphia." If you do not find their names mentioned in any consecutive three or four weeks' issues of THE CLIPPER, they are either in retirement or out of the country. 2. It is our impression that he was in Australia three or four years ago with a circus, and he may be in India with one now.

BRADFORD.—"The Two Orphans" was not the play at the Opera-house, Brooklyn, N. Y., when it was burned, for no opera-house in Brooklyn has ever been burned. That piece was on at the Brooklyn Theatre on the night it was burned. 2. You had better write to the Professor

J. C., Detroit.—1. It depends upon which one you mean by the original Buffalo Bill. If original on the stage, he is still living. 2. Wild Bill and Texas Jack are both dead. That is, at least one of the Wild Bills and at least one of the Texas Jacks are dead. 3. If you have bets as to their names, state those bets.

L.—1. Pippo in "The Mascot" should be sung by a tenor; but in this vicinity it has always been sung by a baritone, the score, which originally was high up on the staff, having been transposed to the capacity of a baritone. 2. The right surname of Gus Williams is Leweck.

P. F. C., Waltham.—Emmerson, Clark and the Daly Brothers were engaged to appear in "Pour Prendre Conge" when it was first produced, Feb. 28, 1881, at the Walnut-street Theatre, Philadelphia. The piece had but a few representations, it being stopped by injunction.

D. C. G., Jersey City.—The song "I Love Music," supposed to have been composed and written by William J. Scanlan, cannot be published. The melody is taken bodily from one of Joseph Skelly's oldest songs. "I Love Music" was published once, but it was stopped as an infringement.

ALEXANDRIA.—We do not here answer such questions. The answers to them are supposed to be in our regular dramatic columns as matter of news, which is not to be repeated here. It was stated in last week's CLIPPER, in the first column of page 522, where Miss Laura Joyce is.

THESPIAN, Boston.—Such agents usually receive a commission from performers. Whether or not managers also pay a commission, otherwise than a booking fee in some few cases, is not for us to say, it being a matter of private arrangement.

J. R. F.—William Warren first played Perkyn Middlewick in "Our Boys" at the Boston Museum March 24, 1879. The play had, however, been seen in that city three and a half years before, at the Globe Theatre.

W. H. B.—1. There are several theatres in the world having a larger seating capacity than the Windsor Theatre, this city. 2. You win in bettting that there are two larger. 3. See answer to "Professor."

J. A. B., Rosse.—By inserting a card in our business columns calling for information of your uncle, you might elicit it. This department is not for tracing up or furnishing whereabouts.

BROOKLYN.—You must state the bet. We cannot guess what you mean by commenced. A theatre can be commenced in at least two ways.

SONG-AND DANCE, Cleveland.—Griffin and Rice were not with Tony Pastor's Combination in either its 1879 or its 1880 season. This covers "about two years ago."

A. B., Philadelphia.—Either through THE CLIPPER Post-office or by reading THE CLIPPER'S negro-minstrel columns and finding out where they are.

MUSICAL, Hartford.—H. B. Caverly, 41 Tavistock street, Covent Garden, London, Eng.

M. F.—1. Barry Sullivan says he was born in England. 2. His first appearance on the stage was made in Cork, Ireland.

T. G., Sault Ste Marie.—"The Twelve Temptations" was not produced at the Grand Opera-house, this city, during the year 1869.

A. E. B., Philadelphia.—Addresses or whereabouts not furnished. That is our rule. Write him in care of THE CLIPPER Post-office.

C. T. H.—Our City Summary will contain due announcement of the fact if the piece is to be played at the Grand Opera-house.

W. C. H., Selma.—Salaries vary, not so much because of the real merit of the performers as because of their reputations.

J. M. F. JR.—We do not know where either made first appearance. It is probable that the gentleman first appeared in Great Britain.

J. J. McG., Morrisburg.—1. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was first played in 1852. 2. No answers by telegraph.

READER, Brooklyn.—"There is no one near but you and I" is incorrect. "You and me" in that case is indispensable.

C. G., Chicago.—William Birch the minstrel was not born in Chicago.

J. C. P., Cairo.—W. F. Cody the actor is the Buffalo Bill who was employed by the U. S. Government as a scout.

J. B. D., San Francisco.—John Wilkes Booth was a star at times.

L. W. F., Middleton.—See answer to "A. E. B., Philadelphia."

INTRODUCTORY.

TUESDAY, Oct. 31, 1882.

The redoubtable Mrs. Langtry is in town. So, too, are a horde of other professionals from abroad, all more or less British, and all more or less actors. Later we may have something to say about the excessively large cargoes of Thespians England has lately shipped us; but just at present Mrs. Langtry dwarfs all the others, and her we welcome to the box-offices of America. She may not be a great actress as yet, but she will probably prove herself a successful financier before she quits us. She will not need to "gild refined gold," in the language of the poet, as the lucre that is to come her way will be in national banknills mostly, with here and there a trade-dollar or other bit of silver without a hole in it. In return for this she will fulfill the other requirement named by the poet. That is, in order to display her beauty to the best advantage she will undoubtedly "paint the Lily." She begins by handicapping us. Her first appearance is truly an unequal match, the lady having a decided advantage over everybody else up to that point where Manager Henry E. Abbey comes in for his share. There was a time when it was thought that the manager had undertaken too much, and that financial disaster would be his lot after Mrs. Langtry had got through with him; but it is now generally conceded that the manager understands himself and the American public thoroughly, and that there will consequently be no "ruined Abbey" in our midst. The impression the lady has thus far made upon metropolitan playgoers may be found treated of in our dramatic columns. Here we simply lift our hat and touch the tips of her fingers in a gallant

WELCOME TO THE ABBEY'S PORTALS.

A welcome to the Jersey Lily!
We will not say that we believe
Her coming to be wise or silly,
Or whether she'll rejoice or grieve;
But, letting pass all sage predictions
Of what may be our own convictions,
We give a welcome true and hearty
To both the Lily and her party.

We've read and heard so much about you,
It seems as if we know you now;
And if we've thus far done without you,
The fault has not been ours, we trow!
For when we learned of your ambition
To tread the boards, with expedition
We sent across an invitation
To have you visit this great nation.

We shall not be too analytic,
Nor put you to too hard a test;
In short, we shall not play the critic,
But simply take you at your best.
'Twill be a merely pleasant duty
To recognize and praise your beauty;
While as for art—'tis almost silly
To look for that in but a Lily!

.....As the band of gipsies from Sullivan County, N. Y., contribute substantially nothing to the attractiveness of "Romany Rye," people have wondered what they are employed for in conjunction with that melodrama. Their real duty is to go about our streets in the daytime advertising the play. They get their best work in on the peachy young girls and the sorry old maids who frequent the vicinity of the Central Park on Sundays. To them they tell fortunes, not failing to describe the man who is to be the individual husband in all the collective cases. For this their rates vary from fifty cents to a dollar—and for fifty cents more they would bring the coming husband to the girl's house that night, while for an additional quarter they would furnish a clergyman to perform the marriage-ceremony. The gipsies in "Romany Rye" are a great scheme.....Minnie Hauk is once more with us. Great singer that she is, she has paid the penalty. Now that she is so terribly overweighted in having to carry the load of so long a name as Mrs. Chevalier Ernest von Hesse-Warteg, she is much broken up, lacking wholly the strong nevres she had when she was unknown to lyric fame, and was simply light-hearted Rivington-street Minnie. The journey home in the steamship Suevia was a fearful trial to her nervous system. It was bad enough to be affrighted by the spectacle of a comet poking itself through a porthole, but the birth of a baby! It should not be permitted aboard of any well-regulated ship that is chartered by prima-donnas, whose contracts with impresarios bind them for a given number of years not to assume a closer relationship than aunt or cousin to anything new in this world. After all, it was not a dear, healthy chunk of baby that was well-nigh the death of the sweet singer. It was a huge chunk of another variety of beef. But we shall permit Mrs. Chevalier Ernest von Hesse-Warteg to tell her woful experiences in her own chosen words to the ubiquitous "Jenkins of the Press:" "The incidents of the homeward voyage were a sight of the comet through a porthole at three o'clock in the morning, the death by choking of an emigrant, and the birth of a baby. They happened close together. It was dreadful—the death of that man on shipboard. If he had got a bone in his throat or something like that, it would have seemed more natural; but he didn't—he choked on a piece of meat almost as big as your fist!" The next time the fair prima-donna has to face such a tragedy she should philosophize. It was a death due to natural causes, the only wonder being that so big a chunk of beef as is described did not smother the man by closing up his mouth and nostrils before he could get it into his throat! And it certainly would have been no less unnatural than "a comet through a porthole" had the man got a bone in something like his throat. It is perhaps the fault of "Jenkins of the Press" that Miss Hauk is made to figure as expressing herself thus oddly; for certainly as a prima-donna she should know that, not different in this repect from the prima-donna, man has nothing else about him that is like his throat.....Minnie's attempt to come it over the public by making it appear that she travels not only first-class, but also in a steamer so large that a comet can pass through one of its portholes, reminds us that we have altogether neglected the nebulous stranger, instead of having made much ado over its appearance. Let us make amends, and at the same time do our minstrel friends a service, by composing a stump-speech appropriate alike to our columns and to His Nebulousness. Suppose we call it a

COMIC LECTUR' ON THE COMICK.

Dear breddren: I begin by presupposing dat such among you as am highly colored is jess 'bout as nigorant ob de emotion ob de hevenly bodies as your unintelligent white friends am. Darfore I'll explanet ate de whole circlecumference ob de unimportant subjec. De gastronomers hab cooked up all sorts ob raisins for de 'currents ob de rotary-press summersaults ob de stars widout der fallin' into Saturn's ring when dey is doing de great springboard act. But let us ravenously return to our mutton, as de French say when dey feel sheep. De floseffers hab thrown but little light on de Comick side (rat) ob de sky. By close watchin' dey got a transit-ory view ob Venus' cutlin's-up, by using de 'spect-her scope, and seen all her flames; for it would have been a burnin' shame to look at dem wid de naked eye. De Comick am a waggrant ob de heavens—a celestial tramp—a irregular rounder—cos he aint a fixed star. De best place to see de little joker am down to Coney Island. Look in de Oriental direction, an' you'll see a Bright'un, sure 'nuff. Engel-man will let you hab a glass as an eye-opener 'gin de Comick appiers. Dis aint iron-y. De filosopher Newton—one ob dem kollidge "Fellers"—got hit on de head onct wid a big apple, dat dey arterwards kalled de "Newton pippin." He asked who frow dat? No answer. So he said: "Dat settles it!" Dis am de way he 'splains de matter: Didn't yer nebber stand in de road wid a melon-patch on one side and a chicken-house on de nudder? You see de full moon a-shin'n' on a big ripe melon an' you hear de flutterin' ob de big fat hen on de roost. As yer can't go both ways ter onct, yer have to stan' stock still. Dat 'splains de whole subjec' clear as sugar house 'lasses. De melon am de distrackshun ob graveyardshun, an' de hen am de graveyardshun ob distrackshun. Dat examples'es why de sun don't run inter de Comick an' why de Comick don't run inter de sun. De fuss I see ob dis Comick he was out on a bender, fur his tail was sodaically twisted about 18,000,000 degrees from de perihodicity dot might bring him to a full stop, yer know. He was a-scooting along thro' de Celestial Managery. Dar was de Big Bear wanted to stand on his tail to 'muse de Little Bear; den de Scorpion mos' bit him on de heel, and he fell backwards on de Crab, but de Lion gib sich a roar as set de Dog barkin' (I'm Sirius); den de Ram butted him, an' he sunk inter de arms of de Twins (O Gemini!); den one ob de Twins run wid a Dipper to de Milky Way to git a drink, and called on Alkie*brandi* an' got some spirits to make a milk-punch. De trouble wid dis Comick am dat "he won't go home till mornin', till daylight does appear." So he gits into trouble ebbery night, an' his head looks as if he'd been runnin' a muck agin Mr. Stabler's club an' got "one ob de finest" ob Mashin's, one dat made him "see stars," and gav him such a de-Gus-tation ob de bizness dat he'd never ag'in play in a game whar clubs am trumps. Den dey had to tellumgraff tur Charley's Wain (as dey call de astronomical ambulance) to "take him in" for repose. De 'takin' in" am a fac, but de repose am a cell.....In Harrigan & Hart's new play of "Mordecai Lyons" puns fall throughout the first act at the rate of about one in every three seconds and a half; and yet there is nothing in that act which is quite the equal of that given by us below. Our Jew-el is in soaring poetry, moreover, while all the puns in the Hebraic tragedy of "Mordecai Lyons" are in groveling prose:

A Jew went into court one day where a Jew-ry sat a trying
A *Jew*risprudence case about a *Jew*eler who'd been lying.
Until he saw a *Jew*venile smile, a *Jew*nior counsel stated:
"To ease of mind you'll bid a Jew till your case is a-dedicated!"

.....Some of our lady-readers have doubtless in their experience had occasion to note the usefulness of the marriage-certificate—in the cases of some of their lady-friends. It is not often that a certificate of a mere marriage engagement is of any service to a man, whatever value it may have in the hands of a woman, inasmuch as he cannot decently institute a suit for breach of promise or reasonably expect a jury to give him more than exemplary damages. Yet last week we had evidence that such a document may do even a man a good turn. Signor Novissimo, the well-known dancer and ballet-master, was arrested upon the charge of having accorded his broad shoulders scope enough to perpetrate an alleged assault upon one Alexander Falks, who works day and night making sofas in a basement in East Thirteenth street in order that folks of leisure may enjoy them in Fifth avenue and its environs. It might have gone hard with the Signor had not his counsel produced in court a parchment carefully tied round with blue silk. It was a certificate of engagement showing that the ballet-master is to be married shortly. The Judge discharged him forthwith. It is better that Falks suffer than that twice as many as he be denied their honeymoon..... Just now they are doing things at our Thalia Theatre with a happy knack. The English scholar will perhaps understand this better when we explain it in German. The Teutonic theatre in the Bowery last week brought forward a new low-comedian—William Knaack.....There are captious people who refuse to recognize anything new in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which has now kept the stage for thirty years; and we have often been asked when managers propose to close in on it. Its life is in part due to the fact that new managers are coming to the front all the time, which lets in the subjoined couplet:

Lots of plays about "Your Uncle" the theatre-goers entrance;
But here's an "Uncle Tom's Cabin" that's managed by Yerance!

This neat bit has reference to the growing venture of Frank L. Yerance, who is running a double "U. T. C." combination, with a full complement of jubilee-singers and

"RIP VAN WINKLE," Planquette's new comic—or more properly romantic—opera was presented for the first time in this country at the Standard Theatre Oct. 28. It opened its career in London, Eng., 14, where it is still an attraction. The book was written by Meilhac, an adaptation was made by H. B. Farnie, and it was then revised by Dion Boucicault. It follows the familiar story in the main. Operatic demands necessitated some changes, however. Among others we find during the closing scenes of the first act that Rip leaves for the mountains to escape arrest on a charge of treason brought by his enemy and his wife's former lover, Derrick Von Slaus. He also has an object in visiting the hills to discover the treasure said to have been hidden by Hendrik Hudson and his crew. In the second act the male villagers, with Nick Vedder, the innkeeper, and the Burgomaster, follow Rip for the apparent purpose of arresting him, but really to help towards his escape. With the object of aiding him, Katrina Vedder's daughter, and Gretchen, his wife, accompanied by the girls of Sleepy Hollow, also go after Rip. This gives several very effective scenes in the mountain region, and the girl choristers especially, each with a colored lantern in hand, form a number of very pretty pictures. Gretchen here meets Rip and tries to persuade him to accompany her; but Derrick approaching Rip, hides, and Gretchen, fearing for her husband's life, pretends to make love to the rascally lawyer, and thus gets him away. Rip is now left alone, and begins his experience with the ghosts of Hudson's crew. This second act is the strongest of the piece, and its scenic and mechanical effects have not been surpassed here in any similar production. The Messrs. Dayton have painted some beautiful pictures for it, represen ting at first a wood scene on the mountains filled to the first entrance with heavy underbrush, vines, trees, etc., this finally disappearing and revealing the mountain-tops, where Rip meets the phantom crew. Sunset and moonlight succeed each other, mists rise and fall, and the appearance and disappearance of the ghosts, who are dashing, handsomely-attired fellows, each holding a tissue-like cloak before him to add to his ghostly appearance, is accomplished by several clever mechanical devices. The whole scene could not be but strongly admired, and it brought out considerable enthusiastic applause. A local coquette, Katrina, Knickerbocker, a Dutch poet, a pompous old Burgomaster and an English officer, Captain Rowley, are new characters introduced in the work, and aid it in a humorous way. There is, however, one great fault at present (which will no doubt be remedied) in that the story drags considerably at times, and this particularly so in the last act, where there is somewhat too much of Rip. With a liberal cutting in the libretto the opera could be made more enjoyable. Musically the story has been treated in a very clever way, and M. Planquette has written some of the numbers in quite elaborate style, attempting, no doubt, to go much above his famous "Les Cloches de Corneville." That he does not succeed altogether, but keeps in about the same groove, with a flight now and then to a higher level, is apparent. The orchestration is, however, very good, and carries out the ideas effectively, and the melodies, while they partake of a small quantity of originality, are bright and fitted to the situation, and, as in this composer's former well-known work, tuneful and ear tingling in several instances. As the story is rather romantic than comic, the greater part of the music follows in the former vein. In the first act the attention is particularly drawn to a pretty opening chorus, Rip's melodious air, "Oh! Where's My Girl;" the catchy, bright song, "The Legend of the Kaatskills," which appears several times through the work, and will be a favorite, no doubt, with the whistling fiend, a duo for Gretchen and Rip, Gretchen's song "Where is the Woman?" and a well-written finale. In the second act we have a lantern chorus that is sure to be encored, a pretty ballad for Gretchen, Katrina and chorus, a cleverly-arranged echo song, some very appropriate phantom music, the nimble song and a taking serenade, "My Pipe;" and among the noticeable features of the third act are Alice's letter-song, which is a very graceful, expressive number, and the music in the recognition scene, which can be admired as being much better than the usual bouffe-ting. There is, in fact, much bright, tuneful music in the score, and a number of the melodies are certainly booked for popularity. The opera will, without doubt, be in favor for some time for its catchy melodies, and here its attractiveness is greatly enhanced by the exceedingly liberal manner in which it has been put on the stage and the excellence of the cast. Several of the characters are very light sketches, but the clever comedy artists who assume them by making much of little heighten the humor of the piece considerably. Carleton's Rip was a genuine surprise; for, though an excellent singer, he had not heretofore shown himself to be much of an actor. His Rip is, however, really a good piece of work, and when it is cut somewhat in the speaking part will present an attractive character. He sang as usual in good form, though his pronunciation is often very indistinct. Ryley as Van Dunk is not so happy as in former roles, being not so well fitted, though he can be credited with doing well with an almost non-humorous character. In his one chance, a comic song, "Van Vattel's Vengeance," he brought out a very hearty encore. One point to be admired about Ryley's singing is his clear enunciation, every syllable being heard. The majority of the cast, excepting Mr. Mansfield and at times Miss Reber, are not possessed of that important characteristic for an English opera singer. Mr. Mansfield made a decided hit as the old Dutch innkeeper. It was a very amusing picture, and true to the life in its make-up. As a character bit it can be put as the best impersonation of the lot. In the last act Mr. Mansfield is seen as a dashing young tavern-keeper, the successor of his father, and it is just as cleverly done as the former part. Selina Dolaro looks well, acts coquettishly and dresses in an abbreviated style, showing her fine form to advantage. She sang very nicely in several attractive songs. Sallie Reber gives a neat portrait of the little housewife, who is represented as a loving little creature, far removed from the termagant of the dramatic version of the story. She acted the part gracefully, and as some of the most taking numbers of the opera are in her role they were sung in a very effective way. She made an excellent impression. Messrs. Seymour and Williamson were both good, and Mr. Rousbey, though inclined to be a little too melodramatic in his acting as the heavy villain, proved to be a capital singer. The chorus, orchestra and minor parts were up to the usual standard at this House, and that is saying much. In consequence of the action of the S. P. C. C., the management were compelled to cut out a pretty trio for Rip and the two juvenile performers in the first act, and Mr. Carleton and the orchestra divided the music between them, the children reciting the lines. The juveniles acted and recited during the scene, and did it well, but, by some curious crank of the overzealous society, were not allowed to sing in this number, though one of them, little Miss Costa, sang in Chickering Hall last June in several selections, and apparently met with no interference. From the favorable impression left, which will likely be deepened when the opera is shortened, we judge that it will enjoy some favor here, and for a travelling company all there ought to be lots of attraction in this—Planquette's latest effort. Chas. Harris is the stage director, and the audience on the first night recognized his skill by loudly calling him before the curtain.

Alfred Cellier leads the orchestra. The cast is:

On Monday night the house was not so good as one would expect from the attractiveness of the opera. This night, however, is generally the poorest one of the week, and the Park Theatre fire may also in a measure be accountable for the moderate attendance. The juvenile performers, referred to above, indulged in their trio on Monday evening, singing with Mr. Carleton in quite a pleasing fashion the pretty music of the number.

MUSICAL NOTES.—The Italian opera season at the Academy of Music gave "Rigoletto" as the attraction Oct. 25, with Ravelli as the Duke and Mme. Zagury as Gilda. "L'Africaine" was on 27, introducing Sig. Clodio, a new tenor, as Vasco di Gama, in which he made a poor impression. Mme. Rossini appeared as Selika. At the matinee 28 "William Tell" was heard, with Sig. Mierzwinski as Arnoldo, and repeated again 30.....Geistinger is still singing at the Germania Theatre.....Catherine Lee is in "Olivette" forms the attraction at the Alcazar this week. "The Tourists" will begin next week, with L. Mestayer's company.....Bazin's "Le Voyage en Chine" was sung by Grau's French opera Company at the Fifth-avenue Theatre 24. "Mignon" was presented 25, with Mme. Privat in the title-role and Mme. Derivis as Philine. Theo reappeared 27 in "La Jolie Parfumeuse," repeating the same performance at the matinee 28. Maurice Grau and part of his double company sailed 26 for Havana. Th o and others left 28. Mme Theo returns here in March, opening at the new Casino.....The features at the Sunday-night concert at the Alcazar 29 were the singing of Mme. Zagury, Messrs. Clodio, Monti and Cor-ini and the instrumental music furnished by Christrup's Orchestra..... The final performance for the present, of "The Queen's Lace Handkerchief" were given at the Casino 28. The house will now be closed to the public, and not opened again until it has been completed and furnished throughout.....The Sorcerer" is still on at the Bijou Opera-house.....An important movement has been made by the directors of the Symphony Society. At a recent meeting it was decided to use the European pitch at all concerts of the society, and to procure the necessary reed instruments. Dr Damrosch will use the low pitch in his orchestral tour this season and at the Oratorio Society's concerts. The new reed instruments have been ordered in Europe.

A SPECIAL MATINEE of "The Squire" is to be given at Daly's Theatre Nov. 7 (election-day).

MR. AND MRS. W. J. FLORENCE and their company are to play "The Ticket-of-leave Man" at a matinee Thursday, Nov. 2, in the Grand Opera-house, for the benefit of St. Vincent's Hospital. The admission is to be one dollar, and there are to be no reserved seats.

A CONCERT was given at Mt. Morris Theatre Sunday evening, Oct. 29, under the management of M. J. Joyce. The artists were Emil Medefindt, pianist; Miss Helena Taylor, contralto; Cecil Burgess, comic soloist; P. Lencioni, buffo-baritone; and Miss Alice Coleman and Charles Petit, cornettists. Niles, Evans, Bryant & Hoey's "Meteors" company opened to a full house 30. The same entertainment will be continued through the week. Minnie Palmer in "My Sweetheart" Nov. 6.

AT NIBLO'S GARDEN on the night of Oct. 30 Maggie Mitchell began an engagement of two weeks, appearing in her favorite role of Marie in "The Pearl of Savoy," and having the support of a company of more than average excellence, and larger than the one she brought forward during her recent engagement at the Park Theatre, although the more prominent members, with but one or two exceptions, are the same. The star was called before the curtain after the drinking-scene. There was an excellent attendance downstairs and in the family circle, but the capacity of the dress-circle was by no means taxed. "Fanchon" and "Mignon" will be the plays next week. There is to be a matinee here on election-day Nov. 7, but none on Wednesday, Nov. 8.

THE THEATRE COMIQUE withdrew "The Blackbird" after the performance of Oct. 24. On the following night the house was closed, and on that of the 26th "Mordecai Lyons" had its first presentation on any stage. The new play is by Edward Harrigan, who also supervised the preparations for its production. It is in a prologue and three acts, and was thus cast:

Mr. Lullaby	William West
Stephen Radcliffe	W. Scallan
Warren (a servant)	Chas. Coffey
Jimmy Reilly	George Merritt
Barnaby Guy	William Merritt
Jefferson Filkins	J. Fitzsimmons
Addison Adze	W. Atkins
Littleton Spence	J. McCullough
Mordecai Lyons	Edw'd Harrigan

Dr. Richard Carroll, by M. F. Drew; Boy, by Master Guion; Officers, by Messrs. Joe Sparks, M. Foley and John Sparks; and the child Esther Lyons, by little Katie Scallan, are characters in the prologue that do not figure in the play proper, which is supposed to occur eighteen years later. There is also a lapse of five months between the second and third acts. "Mordecai Lyons" is one more of several experiments Mr. Harrigan has made since 1877 with the view of advancing himself to the legitimate stage, to adorn which he has had a praiseworthy ambition ever since in a brief sketch he impersonated Old Lavender, which sketch he afterwards elaborated into a drama three or four acts long. This paper commended Mr. Harrigan's creation of Old Lavender in the original sketch as one of the finest pieces of character-acting it had ever seen; but it did not so unreservedly regard it when the part was elaborated to fill out a play of several acts, because it did not then, and it does not now, conceive that a lengthy drama with a continuous and cohesive story and interdependent action on the part of the characters is exactly the sort of entertainment the peculiar clientage of the Theatre Comique expect when they take seats therein. It may be termed an in-and-out theatre, inasmuch as many of its patrons have been in the habit of dropping in at almost any time within an hour and a half after the first lifting of the curtain, satisfied of seeing something to amuse them, and of going out for good at almost any time, satisfied that they would miss little or nothing essential to a fuller enjoyment of that which they had seen. In this way the same people have gone time and again to the Comique when the one piece was on, without their having ever seen the whole of it, much as in the old days of Christy's and Bryant's Minstrels some people went to hear the first-part singing and quit when it was finished, while others cared nothing for the first-part, and stayed away until near olio time. An analogous motive actuated the patrons of Mitchell's Olympic, where three or four light pieces were on every night, the vaudeville catching some and the broad farce attracting others. It is not at all necessary to discuss whether or not the company at the Theatre Comique is one qualified to do justice to plays that, in spots at least, verge upon the legitimate. In depicting the mingled grief and fury of old Mordecai Lyons when he learns that his only child has not only dared to love a Christian, but has also been betrayed by him, Mr. Harrigan shows that he has made a conscientious study of the character and is endeavoring to picture Mordecai throughout consistently with the theory he has formed with regard to the old Jew. Judged from his standpoint, the performance would be tolerably fair for one who had had something like average experience on the legitimate boards; and in the case of Mr. Harrigan, whose experience has been confined to fifteen years of hard but different kind of work on the variety stage, it is quite creditable. But the fact remains that the audiences at the Theatre Comique have not thought so, simply because they do not attend that theatre with the expectation of seeing senile grief and rage depicted. They are in accord with Mr. Harrigan and with Mordecai so long as the one can sing a song and the other can be funny; and as Mr. Harrigan ceases to sing after the ending of the prologue and Mordecai ceases to be obviously funny a ter the last scene of the second act has been reached, interest in the play has necessarily to suffer, and the actors have necessarily to suffer, too. No possible display of tragic talent can fully compensate the spectators for their failure to hear and see what they had expected to see and hear and; for this reason we question if any experiment in the line of the legitimate, in his own theatre at least, can ever meet with that success which would surely be Mr. Harrigan's were he and Tony Hart to confine themselves to a field they have substantially made their own, and which has not yet been worked out, if we are to judge by the favor with which the audience on the first night received the five songs to which David Braham has given a musical setting. These are "Mordecai Lyons," sung by Mr Harrigan; "Cash, Cash, Cash," sung by Tony Hart; "The Old Bowery Pit," sung by Billy Gray, whose portrayal of the old stage-doorkeeper is one of the most enjoyable things in the play; and "The Lyons of Murray Hill" and "When the Clock in the Tower Strikes Twelve," sung respectively by the two Merritt Brothers, the first having a light tenor voice of pleasing quality, and the other a high tenor of peculiar softness. The clock song, with a chorus constructed after the manner of "Hark, Baby, Hark!" is really the musical gem of the piece, although in the nature of things musical it will probably not acquire the popularity of either "She Lives on Murray Hill" or "Cash, Cash, Cash." Of the acting, special praise is due Harry Fisher for his rendering of the villainous Jack Hastings, and John Wild as Confidence Bob is almost as much in favor with the spectators as Billy Gray. Mark M. Price does faultlessly what he has to do, and so does Tony Hart; but the part of Leon is not quite worthy of Mr. Hart's undoubted talents. Gertie Granville has virtually nothing to do but dress richly, and the other ladies have parts of no special consequence, save Miss Annie Mack, who returned to this Theatre Comique when "Mordecai Lyons" was first brought out, and who, although she had done creditable heavy work in "Christmas Joys and Sorrows" at the old Theatre Comique, was not more in favor with the auditors in the scenes of agony she had to pass through in "Mordecai Lyons" in conjunction with Mr. Harrigan than that gentleman himself. She was not contributing to noisy, frolicsome fun, in which role the spectators had grown accustomed to see her, and they regarded her as out of place. Therefore she would have been pronounced a failure, even had she been twice as artistic. A few words will suffice to describe the motive of the play. In the prologue the wife of Charles Chester dies, leaving an infant daughter, who, in the absence of the father, is placed in the care of the wife of Jack Hastings. She is given the necessary papers as to identity, etc. These she places in an old clock for safe keeping. Confidence Bob steals the clock and pawns it, and thus the papers come into the possession of Mordecai Lyons, pawnbroker, who has a little daughter engaged in playing child's parts at the theatre of which the stage-doorkeeper is Bailey, who watches over her. She grows up, becomes an actress of renown, goes to Europe, falls in love with Chester, and is by him forsaken in favor of Mary Radcliffe, whom he is about to marry, when Mordecai learns of his daughter's misfortune. From the papers he has in his possession the Jew knows that Mary is Chester's daughter, and he urges on the marriage as a means of securing a terrible revenge. The ceremony is about to take place. Esther, who has been cursed by her father, appeals to Chester to do her justice; but he refuses on the grounds, first, that she is forbidden to marry a Christian, and next that he loves Mary alone. Esther places a phial of poison to her lips, and falls senseless. While she is supposed by the audience and by her father to be dead, the clergyman and the assembled guests await the marriage ceremony between Charles and Mary. The now fairly crazed Mordecai is giving expression to rage and grief alternately, and it is made known by him that Mary is Chester's daughter. Mordecai in turn now becomes either senseless or dead, Esther unaccountably recovers from the effects of the poison, or from the swoon, whichever it was that caused her to lie senseless so long, Chester tenders Esther his hand in marriage without any explanation as to his objection of a few moments before relative to the union of Jew and Christian, one of the characters says: "Let the ceremony proceed!" and the curtain falls. The piece was to have been lightened in its heavier portions for the opening night of this week, and this change, it was thought, would materially help to give it a vitality somewhat akin to that of those purely rollicking plays that have deservedly run for so long a time under the Harrigan & Hart management. A visit on the night of Oct. 30 was gratifying in the discovery that, beginning with the closing portion of the second act, the play had been so relieved of its sombreness as to altogether dissipate the idea of its being unsuited to the Theatre Comique. By the introduction of another female character in the stage-door scene (a member of the company of the theatre where Esther is playing, and impersonated by Miss Lizzie Finn, although neither the part nor the actress' name is on the bill), Tony Hart's role has been elaborated considerably, Leon now figuring as what is termed a "masher," and thus justifying Hart's artistic make-up as the young Hebrew. The curse at the end of this act is now the only serious drawback to the work. Mr. Harrigan has to undertake, and it gains a recall. In the last act his lines and Miss Mack's have been changed, so that both appear to advantage, and the lady, with far less to do, earns applause for her manner of doing it, and also commands attention by virtue of her fine appearance throughout the act. The Jew's repulsive scheme of vengeance has been abandoned. He no longer seeks to marry Chester and Mary, but tells him at once that she is his daughter, whereupon Chester offers to make reparation by marrying Esther, who, when she is next seen, comes in arm in arm with Chester. There is now no marriage ceremony; Esther neither encumbers the stage with her inanimate body nor takes poison; the heretofore miserably wretched old Hebrew is happy; and the piece, instead of being terminated by a listless, dumb-show wedding, is now rounded off with a merry dance. Mary Radcliffe, Mrs. Hastings and the clergyman are no longer seen in this act, which is now so short that it can be lengthened with benefit to the entire piece by the introduction of a few of those bright speeches for which this company are noted. The mounting of the one scene of this act, by C. W. Witham, is rich and elaborate. Relative to the dialect, Mr. Hart's is uniform and consistent throughout, but Mr. Harrigan every once in a while becomes Major Gilfeathery, and gets so far off as Ireland in wandering away from Jerusalem. This needs but to be pointed out to be guarded against. It remains to be stated that the play contains little or nothing that can be reasonably construed as offensive to our Hebrew citizens. On the opening night it played until within a few minutes of twelve o'clock, but on Monday last it was finished at 10.38. The disappointment of many of those who attended the earlier performances has naturally made itself felt in the later attendance, and it will take some little time for the play in its present satisfying shape to counteract the impression the public were led to form of it at first. It need only be pointed out that this experiment has been attended by needless risks to insure hereafter the same wisdom at the beginning of a new play at this house that has been shown in the alterations just made.

"NO THOROUGHFARE," which was presented at the Grand Opera-house Monday night, not only drew a liberal attendance, but enabled W. J. Florence to give one of the most artistic character-representations in his repertory. His make-up was excellent, thoroughly concealing his personal identity, and his acting of Jules Obenreizer, the Swiss, is deserving of warm commendation. Mrs. Florence was not in the cast.

"MY PARTNER," by Aldrich & Parsloe's Combination, was acted for the first time in Haverly's Fourteenth-street Theatre Oct. 30 in the presence of a large audience, who received it so enthusiastically that it is safe to predict that it will prove as successful here as at the other theatres in this city where it has hitherto been presented.

ONLY A FEW VACANT CHAIRS were visible in Daly's Theatre Oct. 30, which proves the attractiveness of "The Squire." The next attraction is to be a new comedy founded upon one of Von Moser's latest and most humorous plays.

DESTRUCTION OF THE PARK THEATRE BY FIRE.—About a quarter before five o'clock in the afternoon of Oct. 30, while some of the employes of the theatre were completing the setting of the stage for that night's performances, they were startled by the appearance of fire in the vicinity of the upper private-box on the Broadway side of the auditorium, where some upholsterers had been at work. A rush was at once made for the fire-apparatus at the rear of the stage, but it was found to be useless, and an attempt was then made to use the fire-extinguishers; but these, also, would not work. The fire crept up the proscenium-arch, and in a few minutes the entire stage was a mass of flame. There was some delay in sending out an alarm, and it is believed that the special wires connecting the theatre with the Fire Department were out of order, as the officials declare that a special call was not sounded, and that their first intimation of the fire came from a box at the corner of Madison-square, a block away. Shortly after the fire reached the stage several loud explosions were heard at brief intervals. These were, it is thought, the retorts charged with gas, used for the calcium lights. The employes, finding that their efforts to stay the devouring element were futile, sought safety in flight. Gaspard Maeder and Mr. Weston, scenic artists; Hamilton Weaver, master-machinist; and Mr. Henry, property man, who were on the stage, readily reached the street. Wm. F. Doran, a stage hand, was in the flies, and was so hardly pressed by smoke and flame that his only chance of escape was through one of the windows on Twenty-second street. He clambered out and crawled along the coping towards Broadway, hoping to reach a position over a portico. After proceeding as far as he could go, he threw himself sideways into the air, and fortunately landed upon the edge of the portico, whence he was rescued by means of a ladder. He was conveyed in an ambulance to the New York Hospital, where it was found that one of his legs was fractured, that being his only injury. Harry Clark, another stage hand, who had rushed up to the flies to attempt to tear down the burning scenes, became enveloped in the flames, and, finding his retreat cut off, managed to escape to the roof. The wind blew the flames towards him, and he was compelled to drop from the roof, and managed to secure a hold over the Broadway entrance, whence he was removed by the firemen. He was found to have been badly burned on the hands and face, and suffering from inhalation of smoke and fire. He was taken to a neighboring drug-store, where he received temporary attendance from a physician who chanced to be in the vicinity, and later was removed to the New York Hospital. It is thought that his injuries are fatal. When the alarm reached the business-office in the front building on Broadway Mr. Tillotson, Mr. Palser and others at once removed the cash, and as many of the private papers, etc., as possible to a place of safety. It is possible that one life was lost in the flames. John Leo, a well-known master-carpenter, had been employed recently at the Park Theatre, and it is feared that at the time of the fire he was in the carpenter's shop. He has not since been seen. The fire burned so rapidly that within some fifteen minutes from the time of its breaking out the roof fell in. All that is left of the theatre proper are the walls, and the buildings on Broadway are seriously damaged. The news of the fire spread rapidly in all directions; still many persons who came in carriages to the site of the theatre about 8 o'clock then first learned of its destruction. Mrs. Langtry was to have made her American debut that night in "An Unequal Match," and a large amount of money had been spent upon the mounting of the piece. Fortunately, her wardrobe had not been sent to the theatre, although it is stated that the costumes, etc., of several members of her company had been taken there and were lost. Manager Abbey estimates his loss in round numbers at $100,000. A large wardrobe, which he had been collecting for several years past, was entirely destroyed, as were the properties, scenery, furniture, fittings of the auditorium and private-offices, etc., which were his personal property. His lease had two years to run, and he had recently been offered a large sum for it. As the theatre will not probably be rebuilt, Mr. Abbey's estimate of his damages is not too high. Of course it is not claimed that the entire effects could be sold for that sum, but it would cost that amount to replace them. His insurance amounts to only $10,000. Mr. Abbey has arranged with the Florences to close their season in the Grand Opera-house Nov. 4, and Mrs. Langtry's debut as tragic talent can fully be by telegraph are in progress between Mr. Abbey and Joseph Jefferson with a view to postponing the latter's engagement, so that Mrs. Langtry can play there four weeks.

HISTORY OF THE THEATRE.

The ground upon which the theatre stood belongs to the heirs of Gen. Phil Kearny, and the estate is managed by the Life and Trust Insurance Company, who leased it to James Fussell, who in 1873 commenced the erection of the theatre. Dion Boucicault and William Stuart were to have been the lessees, but, the theatre not having been completed in October as expected, Mr. Boucicault withdrew. It was dedicated April 13, 1874, Mr. Stuart being the manager and Charles Fechter stage-manager. The opening play was "Love's Penance," an adaptation from the French by Mr. Fechter, who played Karl in the prologue and Dr. Hartreck in the drama. It was played for the last time May 6, because the Sheriff took possession of the property the following day. The theatre was reopened Sept. 16. John T. Raymond appearing for the first time in this city as Col. Sellers. He closed Jan. 9, 1875. A season of French opera by Grau & Chizzola opened 11 and ended March 20. Frank Mayo opened in "Davy Crockett" 22, and played until the close of the season, May 1. Emerson's Minstrels occupied the house for a brief season, closing June 21. The next regular season opened Sept. 6 with the Florences in "The Mighty Dollar," then acted for the first time on any stage. It was played for its 101th and last time there Dec. 17. On the following night Daly's had made its debut on the stage, acting in "Crusoline," then originally produced. He took his farewell of the stage Jan. 8, 1876. The theatre, which closed abruptly 18, was reopened Feb. 16, when Geo. Fawcett Rowe produced "Brass," which was withdrawn May 20. A Summer season was opened with reduced prices 22, Mrs. G. C. Howard appearing in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." She played three weeks, and Joseph Murphy alike period, the theatre closing July 1. Henry E. Abbey assumed the management of the theatre Nov. 27, Lotta, who backed him financially, appearing as the star attraction. She closed Jan. 13, 1877. The chief attractions he has presented are "Our Boarding-house," first time in this city, Jan. 29, and it was withdrawn April 28. J. T. Raymond opened 30 as Col. Sellers. The season closed May 19. "Baby" was produced July 16, and ran until Aug. 26. E. A. Sothern in "The Crushed Tragedian" opened the regular season Sept. 3. He also played in "A Hornets' Nest" and "Our American Cousin." "Risks" was produced by J. T. Raymond Jan. 14, 1878. Robson and Crane were seen in "Our Bachelors" Feb. 25. The Aimee Troupe began a season of French opera May 25. The season of 1878-9 opened Aug. 31 with "Hurricanes" and "Old Love-letters," both by Bronson Howard. "Bouquets and Bombshells" was played Sept. 30. Lotta produced "La Cigale" Oct. 26. Robson and Crane appeared as the two Dromios Nov. 25. C. W. Couldock played in "One Touch of Nature" preceding their performances for a few nights. The Colville Folly Troupe began 23, were followed by John E. Owens. "Engaged" was produced Feb. 17, 1879, making a great hit, and it ran until May 4. The Aimee Opera Co. filled out the season. Sothern opened the next season Sept. 8. "Fairfax" was originally acted Dec. 8. A fire broke out in the vestibule about 9 o'clock P. M. Dec. 18; but a panic was averted and every person escaped from the theatre without injury. J. K. Emmet played an engagement in "Fritz in Ireland." "The Wedding March" was acted for the first time in this city Jan. 31, 1880. During the Summer the theatre was reconstructed and reopened Aug. 23. "Lawn Tennis" and "Jack and Gill" were the earliest novelties. "A Baffled Beauty" was originally produced Oct. 5. "Fresh" was played for the first time on any stage Feb. 2, 1881, and ran until April 10. The Hanlons began a long engagement Sept. 12, "Mother-in-law" was produced Dec. 8. "The Colonel" was played for the first time in this city Jan. 16, 1882, and Lester Wallack made his first appearance in this theatre. "After the Opera" was first played here April 22. "Fogg's Ferry" was produced May 15. At the commencement of the present season Mr. Abbey rented the theatre for four weeks from Sept. 4 to Maggie Mitchell, who on that date originally presented "Elsa." John T. Raymond rented the house for the succeeding four weeks, and on Oct. 28, after the expiration of Raymond's season, Mr. Abbey resumed de facto management.

MANAGER PARKER of the American Theatre takes part in the programme at his house this week, appearing with Edwards in an Ethiopian sketch, "Ten Minutes in Bloomingdale Asylum." Mr. Parker announces this as his first appearance in four years. The other attractions are the Parker Brothers in songs-and-dances; Harry Lloyd, vocalist; the Edwardses, Jas. and Katie, in "The Same Old Story;" Eugene Natowitz, vocalist; Master John Dowd in songs, dances and imitations; the Twilight Quartet, colored vocalists, who sang camp-meeting hymns and refrains; Lillie Western in her musical act; and Cool Burgess, whose business provoked much laughter. "Are You Going to the Ball this Evening?" with Dick Parker and company in the cast, closed the show. Business was good on Monday night.

HARRY MINER'S BOWERY THEATRE was crowded Oct. 30, when the following performers, who are the features there this week, appeared: Law Baker, Ethiopian comedian; Edwards and Morton, songs-and-dances; Morton and Bryant, character vocalists and dancers; Marie Whittingham, whose vocal selections were well received; the Four Nonsenicals—J. Daly, C. F. Crowell, J. Durkee and J. Bowler—acrobatic song-and-dance artists; John Kernell, Irish comedian; Dolly Davenport, vocalist; Henshaw and Ten Broeck in their sketch "Interviewing an Actress;" Kitty O'Neil and Nellie Kernell in clog, reel and jig dancing; George Spence, Minnie Sartelle and George Bunell, vocalists and instrumentalists; the Three Ronaldos in their specialties; the Quaker City Quartet, sketch-artists and character comedians; Hunn and Hawkins, a colored team; and A. H. Sheldon and the company in "Lodgers, Inventors, Dodgers."

CROWDED was the Madison-square Theatre Monday night last to see "Young Mrs. Winthrop." The success of the piece now seems assured.

THE NATIONAL THEATRE offers a good bill for its East-side patrons this week, and on Monday evening a large audience was present. The programme introduced the Barron Brothers in Ethiopian songs-and-dances; Revillo, magician; the Hebrew Comic Quartet, the four Golubock Brothers (announced as their first appearance), Moore and Marr, specialty artists; T. J. Heffron in one-legged songs-and-dances; May Vernon and Alice Gilmore, serio-comic vocalists; Donnelly and Drew in Irish songs and sayings; and Rose Goodall in "The Prairie-flower," supported by the rest of the company, closed the performance.

TONY PASTOR seems to be meeting with old-time success at his theatre in Fourteenth street, where this week he presents the following artists in a pleasing programme: The Four Shamrocks, who give their popular specialty of "The Workman's Strike;" Crandell and Eastwood, whose budget comprises songs, dances and Hebrew impersonations; Alice Smith and Alice Daly in songs-and-dances; Flora M. Pike and Laura Lee, balladists; William Carroll, the banjo-soloist; Flora and May Irwin in their character duets; Harry Mack, who operates with dancing barrels and globes; Louis St. Clair, who sings both soprano and baritone; Jacques Kruger as Barnaby Bibbs; Frank Budworth, eccentric comedian; Florence Bell, soubrette, and Beebe Vining, vocalist, etc.; Joe Buckley and Frank Girard, with the ever popular Tony as a feature of each performance.

THERE WAS A FULL HOUSE at Harry Miner's Eighth-avenue Theatre on Monday evening, Oct. 30, when the weekly change of programme introduced the following new acts by new people and old favorites: The O'Brien Brothers in "The Centennial Weary Traveler," a very amusing sketch; T. J. Ripley, topical vocalist; Blossom and Roach in the black-face sketch entitled "Hallow-eve;" Miss Ada Castleton, balladist; Fred Huber and Miss Kitty Allyne in "Pleasant Dreams;" Alex. Zanfretta in exercises on the tight-rope; Pat Reilly in his comic songs, Irishisms, dances and cartoons of prominent people; Cardello and La Rose in horizontal-bar exercises; Miss Minnie Lee, serio-comic; Frank and Fanny Davis in the sketch "Duffy's Night On;" the Big Little Four—Buckley, Kelly and the Callan Brothers—in songs-and-dances; O'Brien Brothers in acrobatic performances; Sullivan and Harrington in the plantation song-and-dance "Mighty Rapid Liza;" the Four Musical Kings—Wood, Beasley and the Weston Brothers—in performances on a number of instruments; the entertainment being enjoyably closed with the Zanfretta troupe in the pantomime of "Robert Macaire," which is not so old that it failed to excite abundant laughter.

MANAGER HENRY E. ABBEY has engaged the Bijou Opera-house Company to perform at the Wednesday matinees in the Grand Opera-house. "Patience," which was sung at the first performance there, Oct. 25, is to be repeated Nov. 1.

CHARLES BACKUS, to use the language of the playbill, "informs the American public that he considers Salvini's arrival in America a direct challenge coming from a dangerous rival;" hence on Oct. 30 he revived "Othello," in order that the public might judge between the two impersonators of the Moor. The result was a foregone conclusion—Backus won. While he was on the stage speaking "choice Italian," the audience was almost convulsed with laughter, and at the other house "round the corner" Salvini did not elicit a single laugh. "That settles it." The other changes were "A Winter's Night," sung by Wm. Hamilton; "The Old Cuckoo Clock" (first time), by Charles Garland; "The Creedmoor Rifle-team," words by Frank Dumont and music by Mullaly, introduced in the finale to the first-part; and fresh songs by Ricardo as the Jersey (City) Lily. The attendance Monday night was large.

R. MANTELL replaced John W. Norton as Jack Hearne in "The Romany Rye" at Booth's Theatre Oct. 30, and fully confirmed the good opinion we recently expressed of him while he was impersonating Sir Clement Huntingford in "The World" at the Grand Opera-house. The attendance was large.

WILLIAM WARREN'S GOLDEN JUBILEE.—At the Boston (Mass.) Museum, afternoon and evening Oct. 29, the long-looked-for testimonial to the favorite comedian took place under auspicious circumstances. At each performance there was scarcely standing-room available. The Museum presented a gala appearance, the grand foyer having been transformed into a bower of verdure, while the front of the stage and the proscenium-boxes were handsomely decorated. The orchestra took a position under the stage, and on the leader's desk was a life-size bust of the comedian wreathed in laurel. The full-length, life-size portrait of Mr. Warren, painted for Boston parties by Frederick Vintor, was placed in the inner lobby, at the foot of the balcony-staircase, and was surrounded by drapery and well lighted up. The portrait represents Mr. Warren in walking costume, with overcoat thrown open, gloves in hand and right foot forward. The position is a graceful and natural one, and the face bears a genial expression. At the afternoon performance fully 2,000 persons attended, ladies being in the majority. "The Heir-at law" was given, with this cast: Dr. Pangloss, William Warren; Dick Dowlas, Charles Barron; Daniel Dowlas, Alfred Hudson; Zekiel Homespun, G. W. Wilson; Mr. Steadfast, S. Vincent; Maria, Miss Nora Bartlett; Lady Sneerwell, Miss Kate Ryan; Lady Jane Modish, Miss Miriam O'Leary; Lady Betty Curricle, Miss Gertie Blanchard; Lady Dundizzy, Miss Mary Sears; Lady Frizzle, Miss May Russell. Fully 1,800 persons attended this performance, and again the veteran actor received a cordial welcome. At the close of the screen-scene he was called before the curtain and a laurel wreath was presented him—the tribute of Mlle. Rhea—while a handsome floral tribute came from another donor. Mr. Warren in returning thanked in a brief speech mentioned the following artists who had volunteered their services, but were unable to be present: Mr. Barnabee, who was the first to offer his services, Mr. Booth, Mr. Wallack, Mr. McCullough, Mr. Barrett, Miss Mary Anderson, Mrs. John Drew, and many others whom time does not permit me to name. Then "Auld Lang Syne" was sung by a chorus of fifty voices behind the scene. The souvenir programmes prepared for the occasion were models of typographical art, containing the comedian's portrait and facts of interest connected with his career. Mr. Warren's gala day did not conclude with the fall of the curtain at the evening performance. A very costly silver vase was awaiting him at home, with the following self-explanatory letter:

BOSTON, Oct. 28, 1882.

AT THE BOSTON (MASS.) MUSEUM last week "The Parvenu," "London Assurance" and other comedies were presented up to Saturday, when both performances were for the Warren jubilee, as elsewhere detailed in these columns. THE BOSTON BIJOU THEATRE, it seems now, will be in a completed shape ready for its formal opening Nov. 27. The interior decoration is almost ready, the chairs are being made, and the gas and steam fittings are in place. Early this week a double force of workmen were started to make up for past delay. George H. Tyler is to be at the head of the enterprise, Fred Vokes retiring, and THE CLIPPER'S intimation of several weeks ago proves to be well founded. Instead of "Vokes' Bijou," the new theatre is to be called the "Boston Bijou." It is said that the various dates made at the first part of the season will be kept, except as far as concerns the Vokes Family dates. The Bijou Opera Company also will not, it would see, take permanent form.

"HELEN OF TROY" was produced for the first time on any stage at Wood's Museum, Philadelphia, Oct. 30. It is an adaptation from the French by Mrs. Lafitte Johnson, and was cast thus:

Gustave Plantin	Clinton Hall	Servant	E Edwards
Moufiar Pasha	Willis H Page	Pincemaille	Clara Lambert
Kastor	W. W. Maurice	Caroline	Emmie Wilmot
Verdinet	H S Parke	Myrza	Elvia Crox
Pinson	G. W. Marks	Mme De St. Phar	Julia Porter
Dupontrail	Jerry Taylor	Jeannette	Bessie Reynolds
Moulinet, innkeeper	J. Thomson	Pinchenette	Fay Chester
Osiris, slave	J. C. Callahan	Muscade	Kate King
Journalist	J. Osmond	Sylvia	Jennie Smith

In Act I the scene is laid in Paris, Act III in Cario, Act II in Marseilles, Act IV. in Saint Germain. The plot hinges on the adventures of one Gustave Plantin, the son of a rich tanner, who, thirsting for glory, has written a play. Having tried in vain to have it produced at the Varieties, the Theatre Francais, the Grand Opera, etc., he at length applies to the Bouffes du Sud, of which Mme. Pincemaille is directress. She has a charming daughter, named Caroline, of whom our playwright becomes enamored, the young lady returning his passion, and madame promises to produce "Helen" immediately after the wedding. He writes to his father, announcing his approaching marriage, and invites him to the ceremony. Mme. Pincemaille anxiously looks for his arrival, as the Sheriff has taken possession of her premises, and she has only prevented his carrying off her effects by telling him that the elderly Plantin will pay her debts. The hour for the ceremony approaches, but still the father is not present. Gustave proposes that they shall go to the Mayor's without him and madame, and tells Jeannette that a gentleman will arrive during their absence, and instructs her to follow at once and announce his arrival. As soon as the wedding party are off, a wealthy Egyptian, Moufiar Pasha, also enamored of Caroline, makes his appearance, and is mistaken by Jeannette for the father. She hastens to inform her mistress, who returns to welcome Gustave's parent, when ensues a capital scene of mistaken identity, which ends by Moufiar declaring himself and his intentions, and madame indignantly shows him the door. The wedding party returns; still no father. Gustave begins to read his play but is interrupted by a letter from his paternal relative, disowning him for the idiotic marriage he proposes. The minion of the law will wait no longer, and commences to carry off the effects. Madame then declares her intention of producing "Helen of Troy" in Marseilles. Act II opens in a room at a hotel in Marseilles, where Gustave, Caroline and madame arrive and take possession, just after the departure to Cairo of Kastor, a young Egyptian who has been seeing life in Paris. From this circumstance the funniest situations arise. There is a secret entrance communicating with a room in the next hotel, in which Myrza, the daughter of Moufiar Pasha, is locked up. She and Kastor have fallen in love with each other by singing duos. Moufiar calls to demand an explanation, and surprises madame en déshabille. Plantin overhears Moufiar, and, supposing he came from Caroline, thirsts for vengeance, but Moufiar escapes through the wardrobe. Kastor now returns to the room to meet Myrza, who has promised to open the door when he returns and knocks. He gives the signal and is confronted by Moufiar Pasha. The scene is in darkness, a duel takes place, and Moufiar, supposing he has killed Kastor, retires. Plantin returns, finds Kastor in his bride's room, and makes efforts to avenge himself, but Kastor escapes by the balcony. Myrza now appears, and, mistaking Plantin for Kastor, agrees to elope with him. Plantin, desperate at his wife's supposed deceit, succumbs to Myrza's entreaties, and with his darling "Helen of Troy" safe in his grasp takes flight, barely eluding Moufiar, Caroline and madame, who appear in search of them. Act III introduces us to Moufiar's palace at Cairo. Kastor appears in disguise, trying to catch a glimpse of the wife whom his father has selected for him. He has two female slaves, whom he wishes to dispose of to Moufiar. They prove to be Caroline and her mother. Moufiar purchases them and introduces them to Myrza, who tells them of the delights of Cairo, one of which is the theatre, at which is to be played that night, for the first time, "Helen of Troy," the author appearing in the principal role. Caroline and her mother resolve to be there, and an amusing scene ensues, in which Caroline seeks to obtain Moufiar's permission to go to the theatre. In the meantime, Osiris, a slave, has, at the direction of Myrza, introduced Plantin into the palace. Concealed beneath the cushions of the divan, he sees Moufiar making love to his wife, and Plantin is metaphorically and physically sat upon. He cannot make his escape in time to appear at the theatre, and the performance cannot be given without him, as he has the famous "Helen of Troy" in his pocket. Madame Pincemaille, who has been to the theatre, returns and announces the dismissal of the audience, and that the Khedive has ordered the missing author to be impaled. Plantin in despair leaps into the Nile. Act IV opens in a beautiful Summer residence outside Paris, rented by Moufiar Pasha, who is now director of a theatre, and is giving a breakfast to the artists and the press in celebration of the one hundredth performance of "Helen of Troy." Plantin, who has been saved by the Nile boatmen, makes a voyage to America, and wanders back to France in the garb of a common sailor. When he discovers that his "Helen" has been produced and scored a success, he is overjoyed and easily reconciled to Caroline, to whom the play owes its success.

NEW PIECES.

"Hope,"

an original drama in four acts, by Arthur Law, was produced in the Standard Theatre, London, Eng., Oct. 2. It is thus spoken of: "The story is replete with interest, the text has a polish not too often found in pieces of this class, the incidents are exciting and abundant, and towards the end there is the indispensable sensation, which in this case is as novel as it is ingenious, and which is only to be seen to be admired. There is one great blot upon the piece, in the fact that a son is made to connive at the escape of a murderer because he is the father of the girl he loves, while his own father has been found guilty, and is being hunted down as the perpetrator of the crime. The opening scene is the Haunted Glade, leading to Deepfield Manor. Here we make the acquaintance of all the principal characters—Squire Golding of Deepdale Manor, Ralph, his son, Colonel Harding, Mr. Musgrave of Oakfield Hall, Giles Grimwood of Deepdale Cottage, Leary, a gamekeeper, Mrs. and Marion Musgrave, and Amy Golding. Twenty years prior to the commencement of the story, Colonel Harding, while resident in Australia, has had his house attacked by a gang of bushrangers, who have carried off his only child, a girl, of whom he has since been able to learn nothing. The motive for this act has been revenge, for the head of the gang is a convict named Dyke, who has in the "Old Country" been found guilty of a serious breach of the law by a jury of which Colonel Harding was the foreman. Now let it be revealed at once—for it is revealed to the audience in the representation—that Mr. Musgrave of Oakfield Hall is none other than Dyke, living in affluence under an assumed name; that he has married a well-to-do proprietress of a traveling circus, upon whose tongue he has continually to place a check; and that Giles Grimwood, who has recently taken up his abode at Deepdale Cottage, and Blackburn, who is with him, are his old associates in evil-doing. Musgrave and Grimwood meet; there is mutual recognition; Grimwood, seeing Musgrave's position, demands hush-money; there are a quarrel and a struggle, knives are drawn, Grimwood is killed, his body is found by Squire Golding, who is presently denounced as the murderer by Blackburn, who has witnessed the terrible deed, and who spares Musgrave in the hope, in his turn, of making something out of him. The scene of the second act is the parlor of the Blue Lion, where Blackburn is visited by Musgrave, who, of course, guesses that he will have to be paid for his silence. Leary, the gamekeeper, disguised, and pretending to be in a drunken sleep, overhears their discourse, gets his suspicions confirmed, and later, concealing himself in the trunk of the hollow oak supposed to be the residence of a ghost, obtains possession of the very knife with which Dyke, alias Musgrave, committed the murder for which Squire Golding has just been tried, convicted, and sentenced to penal servitude. In the third act, in the library at the Manor, Leary produces this knife, and entrusts it to the safe keeping of young Ralph Golding, who is to make Marion Musgrave his wife. The web which is to entangle the real murderer is getting pretty well about him, and he knows it, and resolves on escape. He contrives to get possession of the knife which would incriminate him, and is screened in his burglarious act by Ralph, who, by this time, has become convinced that he and Dyke are identical. He speaks no word to clear his father's name, but he resolves to do all in his power through love for Marion to insure the arch-scoundrel's safety. And then comes the striking denouement. The road to escape seems to be open to Musgrave through a tunnel leading from some chalk quarries. We have seen the men busily engaged in their daily toil, but they have been sent away with money to get beer. We have seen the contractors' trucks heavily laden making a rapid descent, and the empty ones ascending to take their place. But they are standing still now. Musgrave and Blackburn have here to settle accounts. The quarrel between accomplices in crime which we have seen in the first act has to be repeated in the last. Again the mastery rests with Musgrave, who knocks Blackburn backwards and insensible into one of the chalk trucks. He seizes a pickaxe with the intention to administer a blow which shall rid him forever of the only witness of the murder of Giles Grimwood, when his hand is stayed by what he thinks is a brilliant idea. He will set the trucks in motion, and Blackburn will be dashed to pieces at the bottom of the steep decline. He puts this idea into practice, and then turns to make good his escape. But there is a surprise for him and for the spectators. As three trucks go down, as we have said, three more come up. The rule is not departed from. Blackburn descends, but the officers of justice ascend, and very quickly Musgrave's wrists bear gyves, and his career of crime is cut short. Blackburn, who has been only wounded, is brought in to complete his discomfiture, the innocence of Squire Golding is made apparent, and, as will be guessed, Marion, with whom Ralph Golding is so deeply in love that he has forgotten filial duty, is shown to be not the daughter of the villain, but the child stolen from Colonel Harding, as related in connection with the first act.

Two Pieces and Neither Finished.

"Mariette's Wedding,"

an operetta by W. E. Morton and Hayden Millars, and a drama entitled which has for a subtitle "The Jester Who Turned Traitor," and is an adaptation of Ouida's novel by Hartbury Brooklyn, were produced in the Adelphi Theatre, London, at a matinee Sept. 30. The Era says: "The operetta abounds in weak rhymes and still weaker puns, but the music is tolerably tuneful. Just before the end was reached it seemed to have occurred to somebody that, with further time spent on the operetta, the 'realistic drama' would be in danger, and, to the amazement of all present, G. P. Prior was heard to give utterance to this extraordinary couplet:

On some future occasion we hope to play
The whole of it, which we haven't time to-day, and the curtain dropped. Concerning the drama, it remarks that "the author has taken some five-and-twenty of Ouida's characters, and some scores of pages of her book, and, having turned them loose, as it were, on the stage, he has called the result of his labors a realistic drama. Those among the audience who had not read the novel were hopelessly bewildered by the mixing-up of matters by the adapter, and were wearied as well as puzzled by the overwhelming verbiage in which he has indulged. During the fifth act, as the hero advanced with elegant strides and evidently prepared to deliver another long speech, the official in the prompt-box dropped the curtain, turned down the gas and spared the audience any further infliction."

"Forever,"

a sensational drama, in seven acts, by Paul Merritt and George Conquest, was produced in the Surrey Theatre, London, Oct. 2. It was thus spoken of: "The authors of this extraordinary piece have noted the revived taste for melodrama, and have recently profited by it; but now, putting too great a faith in the poet's declaration that the appetite grows by what it feeds on, they have proceeded to supply a sensational dish that runs great risk of proving nauseating and of being rejected. "Forever," which commenced at half-past seven on Monday evening and concluded at twenty minutes to one on Tuesday morning, is a bewildering and a wearying conglomeration of crimes—ranging from poisoning to cutting throats—of wonderful escapes and terrific struggles, of the grotesque, the horrible and the loathsome, of pantomimic bustle and melodramatic sensation. In their determination to 'pile up the agony' the authors have 'stuck at nothing.' Nothing has been too wildly improbable for them; nothing too inhuman, nothing too repulsive. They have not stopped short even at the doors of the charnal-house, but have boldly entered, in order, if possible, to harrow the feelings of their patrons with sickening details respecting the victims of that dreadful scourge the cholera." Mr. Conquest played a man-monkey, which caused Dion Boucicault to write a letter to The Era claiming that two years ago he wrote a play suggested by Poe's story of "The Murder in the Rue Morgue," in which a principal part is an ourang-outang.

"From Father to Son,"

a drama in three acts, by Arthur a'Beckett and Palgrave Simpson, was produced in the Bijou Opera-house, Liverpool, Oct. 2. The piece, which is founded upon Mr. a'Beckett's novel of "Fallen Among Thieves," can, it is said, claim rank with "The World," "Youth," etc. The sensational scenes are a burning house, the walls and roof of which collapse, and discover a second "set" of the parapet and secret tower on the roof, and a water-scene with practical sluice-gates, which, when opened, pour forth a volume of water and upset a boat in the stream. It may be thus described: A servant, Dixon, is discovered, and, after a short scene with Raymond, Samson, the village cobbler, enters, and we learn that Sir Ralph Ruthven has been somewhat of a scapegrace during his younger years, and previous to his marriage with the present Lady Ruthven had ruined a village maiden. Lady Ruthven likewise was in love with another man, but was persuaded into a marriage with Sir Ralph by her father—a rich banker—Sir Ralph marrying her for her money. Mention is then made of Sir Ralph's steward, John Lawson, and his son Leopold, between whom there is a strong difference in character, the latter being a fine, handsome, gentlemanly man, educated at Sir Ralph's expense, and the former an ugly and cringing specimen of humanity, who is known to Raymond, the former sweetheart of Lady Ruthven, to be a returned convict. Raymond uses this information to obtain the key of the garden-gate, and places a letter on a workbox appointing a meeting with Lady Ruthven. John Lawson threatens the man, and is overheard by Samson and Dixon; he also determines to betray Raymond to Sir Ralph, so that vengeance may come to his enemy, who might ruin him at any moment. He, therefore, leaves the letter on the floor. Sir Ralph picks it up, reads it and replaces it on the workbench. Lady Ruthven enters, and is closely watched by Sir Ralph. She awaits her opportunity, and, while Sir Ralph is asleep by the tea-table, manages to obtain possession of the note. The family retire to rest, leaving Sir Ralph to follow; but he remains to confront his wife should she attempt to keep Raymond's appointment. Having lost the note, she returns in search of it, and is met by her husband, who taxes her with bringing dishonor upon his name and fame and forces her to keep the appointment. The clock strikes eleven, the hour mentioned, a pistol-shot is heard, and Leopold runs to ascertain the cause, and is met by Edith, who enters with the other inmates of the house. Leopold opens the window and discovers his father, John Lawson. He tells them a murder has been committed, and sends his son off to the scene of it. Leopold returns and shows Sir Ralph a key he has found. This key bears a label: "Garden gate—John Lawson." On the strength of this, and the fact that Dixon and Samson state they heard Lawson threaten the murdered man, Sir Ralph, as a magistrate, orders his arrest; and the first act concludes with a powerful scene for Lady Ruthven, who is astonished and utterly overcome on seeing the body, which passes the window on a stretcher as the act-drop descends. Act two opens with a charming picture of Stelstead Park, with a view of the river, rustic bridge and sluice-gates. We learn, from the conversation between Florence, Edith and Lady Ruthven's maid, that her ladyship had been driven out of her mind, and that Lawson had been duly executed for the murder. Freddy Holston, the villain of the piece, and Leopold's rival for the hand of Florence, now appears with a friend of his, a Mr. Harwood, a successful golddigger he has met in Australia. This man is no other than Leopold Lawson, who, having made a fortune, returns to seek vengeance for his father's murder on the scaffold. Sir Ralph is greatly changed during the three years which are supposed to elapse between the acts, and a scene between him and Lady Ruthven (who is now insane), in which she recalls to him the details of the murder of her lover, shows plainly how he has been mentally tortured for his deed. Leopold is also changed, and is unknown, through which he is enabled to satisfy himself that Florence never really cared for him, and that Edith is in love with him. Freddy, who has possessed himself of the pistol with which Sir Ralph committed the crime, now succeeds in making Lady Ruthven take him to the tree where she has concealed the letter she received from Raymond. This is, however, overheard by Barman, a detective employed by Leopold. The act closes with a very sensational scene, for Lady Ruthven in her madness suspects Edith, who comes to sooth her, of betraying her, and, pushing her into the boat on the river, opens the sluice-gates, the result being that Edith and the boat are capsized. Leopold then rushes on, and, seeing the danger, jumps in and rescues Edith. The next act reveals the fact that Leopold is really the son of Sir Ralph, but was, to avoid scandal, passed off as the son of his steward. This news is wrung from Sir Ralph by Leopold, who has hunted him down, and who has overheard Freddy Holston tell Sir Ralph that he is in his power, and that unless he consents to let him marry Florence he will, in fact, hang him. Leopold now, to save his father, tries to get him away by a secret passage, but Lady Ruthven prevents him following his son, and the house is set on fire by her ladyship, in the mad desire to destroy the letter of Raymond, which is continually preying upon her mind. A great effect is then produced by the entire roof and walls of the room giving way, burying Sir Ralph and his wife with the burning embers, and discovering the parapet of the house, by which Freddy is endeavoring to escape with Florence. Leopold is again to the rescue, a struggle takes place, and part of the masonry breaking away, Freddy falls, and Florence is safe in Leopold's arms. This gave a fine opportunity for a good scenic display, and the sudden collapse of the burning house and subsequent change was duly appreciated by the audience, who applauded to the echo.

"La Vicomtesse Alice," adapted by Leon Beauvallet from a novel of the same name, was recently produced at the Nations, Paris, France. The plot contained in its five acts and eight scenes may thus be told:

A villain named Cardot, who is a kind of agent, has discovered that a gentleman of great wealth has been done to death in a private lunatic asylum by means of opium administered by the medical attendant of the establishment. The deceased was in no degree out of his mind. He has bequeathed all his fortune to the Assistance Publique, but Cardot at once sets to work to discover the rightful heirs, and succeeds in finding out that a widow, Madame Darville, is lawfully entitled to inherit all the property. He accordingly determines to make this lady his wife, but this ingenious part of his plan fails, for the excellent reason that Madame Darville indignantly scouts his proposals. Cardot is not to be so easily discouraged, however, and in order to attain his ends by other means he circumvents the poor woman in such a way that he brings her to complete ruin, calculating that her poverty will force her to change her mind. This expectation is also thwarted, for she drowns herself, and her lifeless body has just been found, when her son, who had been long absent, a young painter of great promise, arrives, and receives such a shock that he becomes momentarily insane. Cardot, therefore, contrives to have him also shut up in the before mentioned asylum (?), and takes measures which he believes effectual for helping him to shuffle off the mortal coil. This time he thinks that by the aid of various forgeries the wealth of the original false lunatic must certainly drop into his clutches. Fortunately, Rene Darville recovers and is enabled to escape from his prison. These incidents are elucidated in somewhat doubtful style during the first three scenes, and the eight others turn on Cardot's chase after his intended victim. In its course he arrives at Nice, where a representation of the Promenade des Anglais during the carnival, with a great show of maskers and mummers, and, above all, a triumphal car bearing a real bœuf gras with gilt horns, forms an extravagant mise en scene. The lady who gives the drama its title is also a widow, but she is young and beautiful; moreover, she, too, is possessed of enormous wealth, which is coveted at the same time as her hand by a thoroughgoing scamp, the Marquis de l'Oserale, who is a scion of the oldest possible noblesse. The Vicomtesse Alice, as a set-off to her riches, has the misfortune to be afflicted with a scatter-brained old aunt, who spends most of her time at the card or roulette tables, and is consequently in her element at Nice. Cardot has contrived to entangle this gambling dowager in his net by providing her with funds to pay her losses, and he has found no difficulty in making her a partner in a scheme he has formed for persuading her wealthy niece to marry the out-at-elbows Marquis, who is also in the unscrupulous agent's power. He has been guilty of a forgery, and the damning paper has come into Cardot's hands, who has held it over his head in order to force him to draw a bill for 100,000 francs payable to Cardot on the day of his marriage. All these elaborate plots are, however, destined to failure, and virtue will triumph over wickedness in orthodox fashion before the curtain falls. Vicomtesse Alice makes acquaintance with Rene Darville, and the young couple fall mutually in love with each other. Then she soon after discovers the machinations of her aunt, the Marquis and Cardot, separates herself from the two first, and succeeds in rescuing Rene from the grip of the agent. Darville kills De l'Oserale in a duel, and the aunt, who has become raving mad, sends Cardot to his last account by a well-aimed blow with a carving-knife. The fortunes of Rene and the Vicomtesse will be duly united at the altar.

"La Dame au Domino Rose," a highly realistic drama in five acts, by Alexis Bouvier, was recently produced at the Chateau d'Eau, Paris.

It opens with an excellent prologue. The scene is laid at dawn under the arch of a bridge on the Seine, where the body of a woman dressed in a pink domino has just been found, and is surrounded by an eager group, among which is the police commissary and a doctor. The latter gravely tells the former that death has resulted not from drowning, but from poison, and everybody present at once jumps to the conclusion of a crime, when a respectable old gentleman rushes on, tearing his hair and exclaiming that it was he who had killed the victim. A short explanation shows that he is not, however, a criminal. M. Verdier takes all the blame of his wife's death on himself, because he had refused his consent to her going to a masked ball the previous evening, and she had run away from their house during the night, leaving a few lines of farewell, in which she declared that her husband would be responsible for any calamity that might ensue. She had evidently committed suicide in a moment of violent excitement. The body is conveyed to the Morgue, while the assembled group disperses. We then make acquaintance with the villain of the piece, Henry de Grillac, who was not only the deceased woman's lover, but also her murderer. It was he who had tempted her to leave her husband's roof, and who had induced her to rob him at the same time. In order to obtain sole possession of the booty thus within his grasp, the wretch had poisoned Madame Verdier, and had brought her to the riverside, so that the water might be handy for disposing of her body when the drug took effect. De Grillac's plan has succeeded to his entire satisfaction, and he is going off with hands full and a light heart when he comes face to face with another woman. The newcomer is a young workgirl, Caroline Vallier, who has discovered Grillac's crime, for she also is a mistress of his. She will not denounce him, for in a few months he will be the father of the child to which she will then give birth; but she treats him to a "scene," and makes him promise to leave the country forever. Such is the first act. Nineteen years have elapsed when the curtain rises on the second. The child, whose advent had been announced, has grown into a charming girl. Renee, as she is named, loves and is loved by Maurice Verdier, the nephew of the murdered lady, and the happy pair are soon to be married. One day, in the flower-market of the Place du Chateau d'Eau, the young man slaps the face of a middle-aged dandy who has dared to insult his betrothed. This individual is no other than Grillac, who has returned to the former scene of his gallant exploits. The result of the rencontre is that a duel is arranged, and, as Grillac is a master of fence, the days of poor Maurice Verdier are evidently numbered. When Caroline hears that the man who had been her ruin has once more stepped in to mar her happiness and that of her daughter, she threatens to expose him if he will not consent either to apologize to Maurice or to allow himself to be wounded by the young man's sword. Grillac prefers the latter alternative, and gives Caroline his promise, but at the same time the scoundrel inwardly resolves to kill his adversary, for he has taken a violent fancy to Renee, being unaware that she is his own daughter. The duel, most artistically and correctly arranged, begins, and Grillac is only playing with his rival, waiting the moment to spit him effectually, when suddenly his sword drops from his hand and he staggers back, receiving a thrust from Maurice's weapon at the same instant. The explanation of Grillac's unexpected discomfiture is simple. The flutter of a pink domino and a female form had passed before his eyes on the borders of the wood in the background. Needless to say, it was Caroline, who had adopted this method of overcoming the enemy. Though severely wounded, Grillac has not been killed. We find him in the concluding act making a brutal attempt to outrage Renee and throwing Caroline into a sewer; he comes face to face with M. Verdier, the husband of his murdered victim, and would probably have there and then committed another crime, when Caroline, who has escaped in some miraculous manner, again appears in her pink domino, with increased effect this time, for Grillac goes stark, staring mad; but nevertheless, as he is led off, the audience is encouraged to hope he may sufficiently recover to be able before long to make acquaintance with the guillotine.

"WRATH, OR A MESSAGE FROM THE DEAD," a dramatization of Ouida's novel of "Strathmore," was produced in Huddersfield, Eng., Oct. 6, but failed to achieve the success hoped for.

GOSSIP.

MR. HOLLINGSHEAD of the Gaiety, London, and James Reilly of Manchester, Eng., propose to erect a new theatre in the last-named city.

THE NATIONAL STANDARD THEATRE and Bishopgate Hall, adjoining, London, are to be sold by public auction Nov. 16.

HARRY PAULTON has completed the libretto of a new comic opera, the music of which will be written by Mr. Stanislaus.

A PANIC.—At the Royal Opera-house, Berlin, just before the performance of "Tannhauser" commenced Oct. 5, the iron curtain which divides the auditorium from the stage fell with a crash among the footlights. The crowded audience rushed to the doors panic-stricken, and the house was soon cleared. Although many persons were severely bruised, no lives were lost. The cause of the accident was the snapping of the chain by which the curtain was suspended.

THE NEW PANDORA THEATRE, London, is to be decorated in Japanese style, and it is said that the management has sent to Yokohama for real Japanese girls to serve at the buffets. The opening piece is to be after the style of the Parisian feeries, entitled "The Yellow Dwarf," and to be written by Robert Reece and Alfred Thompson.

FIRE.—The Theatre in Orebro, Sweden, was destroyed by fire Sept. 25 just before the doors were opened. The actors and actresses, who were dressing, all escaped, some descending ladders, which were at once erected, and one lady jumped from the second story without injury.

"THE MERRY WAR" was to have been produced in the Alhambra, London, Oct. 16.

"FUN ON THE BRISTOL" is in its third month at the Olympic, London, and a rehearsal of the burlesque of "The Two Off 'uns," with J. F. Sheridan as Louise, has been introduced.

ADA LAURENT, transformation-dancer, was in Birmingham, Eng., at our latest advices.

JAMES BLAND has made a decided hit with Sam Hague's Minstrels, Liverpool.

THE ARGYLL ROOMS, London, having been altered into a music-hall, is to be called the Trocadero.

MISS LILA CLAY'S venture at the Opera Comique, London, Oct. 9, appears to have met with favor. The entertainment, given entirely by females, opened with a minstrel-scene, the performers being arranged in four rows. Those in the first row were dressed in scarlet, in the second in white, in the third in blue and in the fourth in yellow and mauve. Behind these were the instrumentalists. The first-part was followed by an American boot-dance by twelve young ladies, and the finale was a comic operetta called "On Condition."

"FEDORA," Sardou's new play, includes five ladies, eight gentlemen—thirteen important roles—and five unimportant roles, domestics, etc.

IN "PEBOLA" some of the characters are supposed to be peers of the realm, and they are to wear robes—of the same quality and make as those worn by peers on state occasions—of the finest velvet, of various colors, blue, crimson, green, etc., trimmed with ermine, while embroidered satin vests and breeches, with silk stockings, and all other details of a state costume will be included. Therefore, when these personages appear in the opera they will be dressed in exactly the same style as peers at a real court-ceremonial.

EBEN PLYMPTON, who acted in "The Love Chase" at the Crystal Palace, London, Oct. 12, is highly praised by The Era for his performance of Wildrake.

AUGUSTUS HARRIS contemplates illuminating the transformation-scene of the pantomime at Drury-lane Theatre next Christmas with electric light.

THE LORD CHAMBERLAIN has licensed "The Novel-reader," recently acted at the Globe Theatre, London, without his permission.

LILIAN LANCASTER is with Fanny Davenport's company.

MLLE. LOUISE ABLEMA is painting a drop-curtain for Bernhardt's theatre, Paris. On the left there is a Greek temple, with the statue of antique art by its side; and on the steps of the temple, in different attitudes, are standing some of the most celebrated of deceased actors. Placed a little in front of the rest is the great Rachel; and on the right, side by side with modern drama and comedy, are fifty portraits of living artists. The sky is blue, and the whole tone very luminous.

SEAMON AND SOMERS were at the Oxford, London, Eng., at our latest advices, Annie and Andy Hughes at the Forresters, and J. Cheevers and Charles Sutton at the Queen's Palace.

EDWIN BOOTH seems to be doing well in the British provinces. He played in Aberdeen, Scotland, Oct. 5, 6, 7. The first night every seat was occupied, the second standing-room could scarcely be got, and on the last night people were turned away. He and his company were entertained by the manager and some admirers of Mr. Booth after the performance 7. He opened in Glasgow 9 to a large house.

ALFY CHIPPENDALE is again acting with her husband, W. Calder, in "Rip Van Winkle" in the British provinces.

MRS. WYBERT ROUSBY (the second) and her husband opened in the Rotunda Theatre, Liverpool, Oct. 9, in "Twixt Axe and Crown."

Beware of Pirates.

LOOK OUT FOR STOLEN THUNDER.

NOTICE TO MANAGERS OF THEATRES, OPERA-HOUSES, HALLS AND VARIETY THEATRES. YOU ARE HEREBY WARNED THAT YOU WILL BE HELD RESPONSIBLE FOR DAMAGES, AND PROSECUTED TO THE FULL EXTENT OF THE LAW IF YOU PLAY OR ALLOW TO BE PLAYED IN YOUR THEATRE, OR OPERA-HOUSE, THE DRAMAS ENTITLED

JESSE JAMES THE BANDIT KING,

THE JAMES BOYS, OR THE MISSOURI OUTLAWS, or any drama wherein JESSE and FRANK JAMES' names are used, or any of the following effects: The Train, Stage-coach, Bank and Kansas City Fair Grounds Robberies; the Bursting of the Bomb, Throwing of Bomb in House, the Escape Through Window on Horseback, the Rescue of the Girl from Burning Building and Escape on Horseback, the Binding of the Detective on the Horse, the Killing of the Brother, and Blowing the Mother's Arm Off.

The above titles and effects are all duly copyrighted, and any infringements will be dealt with in accordance with the United States copyright laws. Certain pirates have gone so far as to advertise the Outlaw's horses, which they know to be our property. We have the only and original JESSE W. JAMES' horses, known as Roan Charger and Bay Raider. We have the only and original drama and equestrian sensation, entitled "JESSE JAMES, THE BANDIT KING, OR THE JAMES BOYS, THE MISSOURI OUTLAWS." All others are open attempts to steal the originator's thunder. This applies to FRANK LAVARNIE and SID FRANCE. Note the open violation here. True copy of telegram, Chicago, Oct. 17: "S. H. BARRETT & CO., Managers of 'Jesse James' Co. Am not playing your piece or infringing on your rights, as I'm playing an old drama played by me for the last four years.—FRANK LAVARNIE." Legal proceedings will be commenced against the manager of the Criterion Theatre, Chicago, and all others will be dealt with in the same manner who produce or allow to be produced any coloring of the above dramas or the effects thereof. Managers of large Theatres, Opera-houses and first-class Specialty Theatres having open dates and wishing to fill them with this the greatest attraction on earth, drawing the largest business ever crowded inside the walls, introducing the famous Outlaw's original and only horses Bay Raider and Roan Charger, and producing the original and only drama "JESSE JAMES THE BANDIT KING, OR THE MISSOURI OUTLAW," can do so by addressing our only authorized agent, FRANK BOWERS, People's Theatre, St. Louis, until Nov. 11. J. K. EMMET
TO
AND THE PROFESSION IN GENERAL.

AS MR. RICKABY ANNOUNCED THAT HIS attraction played to the largest receipts ever known in St. Louis, and mentioned my name as an opposition, with the intention of leading the profession to believe that he had excelled my receipts, and putting a feather in his cap, I saw fit to denounce his statement as false by making a TRUE statement with HONEST figures.

Mr. Rickaby has asked why I did not mention the name of his star in my advertisement. Now, let me ask Mr. Rickaby WHY he did not rely on the name of his star as sufficiently strong to fill a theatre without the charitable assistance of the police force?

Mr. Rickaby and his star felt their insignificance and FEAR OF OUR FRITZ, or they would not have asked protection and assistance of the police force, who walked from door to door begging the citizens to buy a ticket, in order to keep Our Fritz from swamping and burying them alive.

No one is better pleased to learn of any star's success than I am—providing that star does not attempt to steal away my honest record by false statements—nor will I permit Mr. Rickaby's scheming attempt to lower my record by any of his false statements.

As Mr. Rickaby ignored the drawing capacity of his star by asking assistance of the police force to fill his theatre, he must not expect me to extend any more courtesy to his star than he did himself. I never recognized his star as an opposition, nor would any star fail to the position of

A CHEAP-JOHN GIFT ENTERPRISE

I mentioned in my former card the charitable assistance of the combined police force (only), who walked from door to door, begging the citizen to buy a ticket for the Police Relief Fund (not Mr. Rickaby's attraction). Because I considered them (as Mr. Rickaby did) the strongest attraction I could play against, and I feel a pride in knowing that I averaged over $200 more at each and every performance than the police-force scheme could draw. Mr. Rickaby extended no courtesy to me when he announced that his attraction played to the largest receipts ever known in St. Louis, when he knew that I was averaging more money than the People's Theatre can hold.

Mr. Rickaby has clipped a notice from a St. Louis correspondent, which he reprints, in order to throw a doubt upon my record of $17,393.50 in two weeks. The record is an honest one, and can be found at the office of the Olympic Theatre. But let anyone refer to the honest record of the money that was actually in the People's Theatre during eleven performances of Mr. Rickaby's police-force scheme, and they will find it a few thousand dollars less than $14,000.

Mr. Rickaby has seen fit to wage war. He shall have it, but it must be an honest declaration or I withdraw.

As a drawing-card FRITZ EMMET has held the palm for years, AND HOLDS IT STILL, and no star or manager by FALSE figures and FALSE statements, or even the scheming attempt of a CHEAP-JOHN GIFT ENTERPRISE can wipe out the record.

Mr. Emmet played to more money at each and every performance ever known in a St. Louis theatre, which the following figures will prove:

$10,006
in seven performances at the Grand Opera-house last season, and the following unequaled receipts in eleven performances at the Olympic Theatre this season:

$14,478.50, which is $8,000 more than Mr. Rickaby's star actually drew on his own merits as an attraction, after deducting the $8,000 worth of tickets which the police force sold, and nearly

$2,000
more than Mr. Rickaby's attraction actually received at the doors, EVEN AIDED by the combined police force to fill the theatre, by giving them one-half of what they sold. MR. EMMET'S average was over $1,300 each performance. The average of the money actually taken at the doors during the eleven performances of Mr. Rickaby's attraction was about $1,100. Mr. Emmet's share for eleven performances was more than Mr. Rickaby's attraction received for their share after deducting the police force share, the manager's share, and the balance of tickets (which the police force sold) was taken in on the following week on another attraction's nights. Now read another of Mr. Rickaby's queer announcements, in which he says that he played to $19,000 in the same two weeks that Mr. Emmet played in St. Louis. He would falsely lead people to believe (IN ORDER TO SHOW GREATER FIGURES THAN MR. EMMET HONESTLY PLAYED TO IN ST. LOUIS, NAMELY $17,393.50) that he played two weeks in St. Louis to $19,000. Why don't he make an honest and true statement and announce the fact that he played eleven performances only in St. Louis and then departed for Cincinnati, where he played the second week of Mr. Emmet's second week in St. Louis? Now we will follow Mr. Rickaby to Cincinnati and find out what he did there.

Mr. Rickaby claims to have drawn $19,000 in two weeks, eleven performances of which were played in St. Louis, and eight or nine performances of which were played in Cincinnati. Now, deduct the $14,000 he CLAIMS to have drawn in St. Louis from the $19,000, and we find his receipts for eight or nine performances in Cincinnati were $5,000 only.

Now compare Mr. Emmet's receipts for the same cities. In eleven performances in St. Louis Mr. Emmet played to $14,478.50. In seven performances in Cincinnati Mr. Emmet played to $8,389.25. Total for the same weeks played in St. Louis and Cincinnati of $22,867.75, which is $11,867.75 more than Mr. Rickaby's attraction actually drew on its own merits as an attraction, after deducting the $8,000 worth of tickets the police force sold, and $3,867.75 more in eighteen performances in the same cities than Mr. Rickaby's attraction actually drew in nineteen performances, even AIDED by the combined police force to fill the theatre in St. Louis.

Mr. John Rickaby was conceited enough to think his managerial dodge, the CHEAP-JOHN GIFT ENTERPRISE, was going to sweep the earth. But he found "Our Fritz," that has swept around the globe so successfully in past years, has appeared in the present year of 1882 and 1883 with double its former magnitude, striking terror to the souls of falsifiers who attempt to STEAL away the honest record of

Fritz Among the Gipsies

There are no "white lies" or black lies in the receipts as advertised by Mr. Emmet; and if Mr. Rickaby and his lunch-counter correspondent of St. Louis doubts it, Mr. Emmet hereby offers to any person who can prove the following receipts actually otherwise than an honest record of the receipts actually taken at the box-offices of the following theatres:

$1,000 REWARD

$17,393.50
in two weeks, at the Olympic Theatre, St. Louis;

$8,389.25
in seven performances at the Grand Opera-house, Cincinnati, which is substantiated by the following:

CINCINNATI, October 21, 1882.

MY DEAR EMMET: Allow me to congratulate you upon the enormous success of your engagement this week. And if financial result is any criterion, you must have just exactly what the people want, for your receipts have exceeded those of any engagement ever played in the Grand Opera house by nearly two thousand dollars. Come again. Yours, truly, R. E. J. MILES.

$9,222.75
in seven performances at HOOLEY'S THEATRE, CHICAGO, ILL.

$6,579.50
in seven performances at MACAULEY'S THEATRE, LOUISVILLE, Ky., and balance of week at DICKSON'S THEATRE, INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., making a total of

$41,585.00
in FIVE WEEKS of thirty-six performances.

Mr. EMMET'S share for the above five weeks was $27,030.25.

All of the above unequaled receipts were accomplished by Mr. EMMET, who, a lunch-counter correspondent claims, has an "unmusical voice," while Mr. Rickaby's Silver-voiced Tenor had to go begging with the police force in order to get a full house. Mr. Rickaby's scheme of giving the police one half of what tickets they sell to fill the theatres will answer for his attraction. But it should be placed upon the catalogue as a CHEAP-JOHN GIFT ENTERPRISE.

Yours, etc.,
33-1t J. K. EMMET.

THE COLD MINE OF 1882.

DAVENE'S

COLOSSAL ALLIED ATTRACTIONS.

THE LARGEST COMPANY PERFORMING AT THE LARGEST THEATRE, IN THE LARGEST CITIES, TO THE LARGEST RECEIPTS ON RECORD.

NOTWITHSTANDING THE WEEK AFTER THE FAIR, WE WORKED TO BIG BUSINESS AT THE OLYMPIC, CHICAGO, ILL.

OPEN AT THE ACAEDMY OF MUSIC OCT. 30, for One Week.

READ THE OPINIONS OF THE CHICAGO PRESS:

THE OLYMPIC.—Davene's variety organization is giving an excellent entertainment at this theatre. The programme opens with Sheehan and Coyne in a funny Irish sketch, entitled "The Family Next Door." This is followed by Miss Alice Gleason, a pleasing vocalist, who sings the famous "Peek a-Boo" in commendable style. Boyd and Sarsfield are next seen in "Going to the Ball," introducing warbling, imitations of steam calliope, etc. Miss St. George Hussey, who is unrivaled in the line of male Irish impersonations, gives a pleasing act that elicits a great amount of applause. Miss Enid Hart and Fred Hallen, unusually genteel and pleasing in sketch, are the next introduced in a musical rustic sketch "Over the Style." They are entertainingly original, and win liberal applause. They sing well and have good general talent. The French Troupe Davene come after in their parlor acrobat performance, which is very good. The younger of the two women is really wonderful in her execution of difficult feats. Ella Wesner, the well-known male impersonator, is the next candidate for favor. Her cigarette song is a unique form of advertisement. As usual, her costumes are elegant and varied. The Villion Bicycle Troupe next occupy the stage with their skillful manipulations of their bicycles, introducing extraordinary evolutions and somersaults. Herbert and Joe Cawthorn, in their Irish and Dutch sketch, "Off for Australia," the French Troupe Davene in their wonderful gymnastic feats, full of peril and daring, and Sheehan and Coyne, in a farce entitled "An Every-day Occurrence," conclude the very interesting bill. The attendance is very large, and the audience show genuine enjoyment in most of the specialties.—CHICAGO INTER-OCEAN, Oct 26, 1882.

OLYMPIC—VARIETY.—W. M. Davene's Colossal Allied Attractions drew a crowded house to the Olympic last night. The principal features of the entertainment were the performances of the Villion Family, the French Troupe Davene, and the comical Cawthornes. The Villions, two men and one woman, go through a varied gymnastic performance while riding on one, two or three bicycles. The Davene troupe are gymnasts and trapeze performers, and Mlle. Lotto produces pleasing horrors in the minds of the spectators by a headforemost leap from the dome of the theatre to a net spread just above the heads of the audience. The comical Cawthornes, Herbert and Joe, produced considerable original fun, and were so persistently encored that they were compelled to make funny excuses and let the play go on. The entire performance is good.—CHICAGO HERALD, Oct. 25, 1882.

For Terms and Dates apply to W. M. DAVENE, Sole Proprietor and Manager.

N. B.--NOTICE TO MANAGERS.--HARRY D. GRAHAM is no longer connected with this Combination. 33-1t

MISS ELLA WESNER,

The Acknowledged Beau-ideal of Society Entertainment, Surnamed "THE CAPTAIN."

Miss Ella Wesner personated the society young man and the "mashing" captain to perfection. She is a strong card.—CLEVELAND HERALD.

Ella Wesner, the well-known male impersonator, is the next candidate for favor. Her cigarette-song is a unique form of advertisement As usual, her costumes are elegant and varied.—CHICAGO INTER-OCEAN.

Miss Ella Wesner, with the Davene Troupe at the Academy during the week, certainly stands at the head of the list of male impersonators. She is such an excellent man upon the stage because she looks like one off the stage. When she goes upon the street she attracts general attention. She has her black, wavy and glossy hair cut short and parted at the side. Her head is covered with a black Derby hat; she wears a black coat much like a man's, with linen collar and cuffs. Her black skirts alone designate her sex, but she looks like a young man in female dresses. When she comes down to dinner at the Striebinger House there are a general dropping of knives and forks, and a general twisting of masculine necks to behold her. It may be said that she eats very much like anybody else, only it takes her a long time to reach the end of the pastry. Some of the men linger half an hour in the upper hall to get a look at her as she comes from the dining room. She does not seem to mind the numerous stares one particle—has grown entirely used to them.—CLEVELAND CRITIC.

NOW TRAVELING WITH THE DAVENE COMBINATION. GREAT SUCCESS. 33-1t

Miss St. George Hussey,

THE ONLY AND ORIGINAL IRISH MALE IMPERSONATOR.

The Success of the Continents. Erin's Envoy. The Recipient of 183 Magnificent Floral Offerings in Five Months. Not one Vacant Date since her arrival here, Twelve Months Ago.

Miss St. George Hussey, the Irish male impersonator, was vigorous and original, and received an ovation. She has a clear claim to her title of the greatest Irish impersonator on the stage.—THE CLEVELAND DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CRITIC, Oct. 21.

Of Miss St. George Hussey it is scarcely necessary to speak, so universally popular is she as the best, if not the only, impersonator of male Milesian parts. Who that has ever heard her "Show me the man that struck my wife" is likely to forget either song or singer? She was repeatedly called, and concluded with a cleverly-danced Irish jig.—CHICAGO MORNING NEWS, Oct. 24.

Now on tour for 1882 and '83 with W. M. Davene's attractions, the finest show and the happiest company on record. Out seven weeks and likely to be out 70! Love to the dear ones at home at the Middleton Mansion. Agent, J. A. BROWN. Permanent address, No. 1 East Third street, New York City. 33-1t

P. S.—We are now making a big success with Davene's Colossal Allied Attractions. SEE WHAT THE PRESS SAYS:

Miss Enid Hart and Mr. Fred Hallen were entertaining in their musical rustic sketch. Fred is a little hard on the boys, but he is original, and so pretty in his yellow wig that the admiration of the ladies will atone for the envy of the gentlemen.—CLEVELAND CRITIC.

Miss Enid Hart and Fred Hallen, unusually genteel and pleasing in sketch, are the next introduced in a musical rustic sketch, "Over the Stile." They are entertainingly original, and win liberal applause. They sing well and have good general talent.—CHICAGO INTER-OCEAN.

Miss Hart and Fred Hallen have an original and highly-pleasing duologue with songs, which was perhaps the feature of the evening, and elicited a hearty recall.—CHICAGO TIMES. 33-1t

ELEGANT STEM-WINDING WATCH

FREE TO EVERY READER OF THIS PAPER.

Owing to the failure of the large importing house, we have been able to secure their entire stock of GOLD, SILVER and NICKEL CASED WATCHES at less than one-half the cost of importation. There are included in this stock over 12,000 solid nickel-cased stem winding watches which we wish to convert into cash at the earliest possible date. In order to do this we make the following LIBERAL AND UNPARALLELED OFFER. UPON RECEIPT OF $4.00 we will mail, post-paid, one of these SOLID NICKEL CASED STEM WINDING WATCHES, the retail price of which has always been $10 in this city. They are all excellent timekeepers, flat, heavy beveled edged crystals, and never change color. The price we offer them at is much lower than the wholesale price, and less than they could be bought by the gross to-day; but as a further inducement and in order to introduce our goods and publications in your vicinity, we will send you in addition to the watch, THE ILLUSTRATED HOUSEHOLD GUEST MAGAZINE one year free. This is one of the best magazines of the day. It contains illustrations from all parts of the world, stories, sketches, anecdotes, poems, statistics, useful information, household notes, garden and farm items, answers to correspondents, puzzle department, Sabbath reading, and in fact everything that can be found in any first-class magazine.

The subscription price has always been $1.50 per year. For $1.00 extra, or $2.50 in all, we will send an elegant gold plated chain, worth, at retail, $2.00.

JUST THINK OF IT, FOR $4 we send an elegant stem-winding watch and the HOUSEHOLD GUEST MAGAZINE. This makes the watch cost you but a trifle, and you can sell a hundred for double the money we ask. This offer could not be made were it not for the fact that we bought the watches at one-half cost of manufacture. This Watch will sell readily for $8 to $10. Order now.

HOW TO GET A WATCH FREE.

If you will get up a Club of Ten Subscribers to our Magazine, and send us $40.00, $4.00 for each subscriber, we will send you a Watch and the Magazine one year free for your trouble, and each person in the Club will get the Watch and Magazine we offer. The illustration given was made from one of the watches, and is a perfect representation. Send money by post office order or registered letter at our risk. As to our responsibility we refer to any New York publishers or merchants. Address E. G. RIDEOUT & CO., 10 Barclay St., New York.

FREE TO Every Reader OF THIS Advertisement! A Splendid Timekeeper.

In order to advertise HOUSE AND HOME, and secure subscribers promptly, we have decided to make the following most princely and magnificent offer to each and every reader of this paper: It is the common practice of the gold and silver refiners of England and Switzerland to purchase from the pawnbrokers of their respective countries all the gold and silver watches which have been unredeemed, simply for the sake of the gold and silver cases. The works are then sold to a celebrated watch firm who have made a specialty of this business. This firm places the works in the hands of skilful workmen, who set to work and put them in as good condition as possible. These works embrace every variety of movement, some of them being very fine and perfect timekeepers. We have just purchased the entire stock (25,000) of a bankrupt concern of the above described watches at less than the first cost of the raw material.

On receipt of $1.50, the subscription price of HOUSE AND HOME, and $1 00 extra to pay for packing, postage, and registering, we will send HOUSE AND HOME for one year (52 numbers) and one of these watches, postpaid, to any address in the United States. Watches mailed the day the order is received. The watches were purchased specially to go with HOUSE AND HOME, and will be furnished only to the subscribers to that publication. In order to introduce it at once we make this unusual offer, which could not be made were it not for the fact that we bought the watches at one-quarter cost of manufacture.

On receipt of 50 cents extra we will send our new and elegant watch chain with a whistle charm and dog call attachment—just the thing for hunters and sporting men.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

Remember, any one sending us money for HOUSE AND HOME on the above offer, who can honestly say that they are not satisfied with their bargain, can have their money cheerfully refunded.
